This course examines ethical issues confronting healthcare workers caring for poor and minority populations, whose capacity for health and recovery from disease are compromised by social conditions in which they grow up, live, work, and age. We aim to broaden and reorient understandings of disease, patient autonomy, and clinician duties within contexts of structural inequalities related to socioeconomic, status, race, ethnicity, gender, and other salient social differences.