The Johns Hopkins Urban Health Institute in conjunction with the WK Kellogg Foundation announce the launch of a national peer-reviewed journal dedicated to community health partnerships. Progress in Community Health Partnerships: Research, Education, and Action addresses topics focusing on the growing field of community-based participatory research (CBPR) while promoting further collaboration and elevating the visibility and stature of CBPR as a means toward eliminating health disparities.

The mission of the Journal is to facilitate dissemination of programs that use community partnerships to improve public health, to promote progress in the methods of research and education involving community health partnerships, and to stimulate action that will improve the health of people in communities. Communities, as defined by the Journal, may be based on geography, shared interests, or social networks. The Journal is dedicated to supporting the work of community health partnerships that involve ongoing collaboration between community representatives and academic or governmental partners.

Articles will include:

- Original research (methods sections must provide details on how community partners were involved in the project; community partners of accepted articles will be interviewed by a member of the editorial team for a question and answer interview that will be published along with the article)
- Works in progress and lessons learned
- Community perspectives
- Policy and practice perspectives
- Theory and methods
- Education and training
- Practical tools
- Systematic reviews
- Invited editorials

The first issue is expected in Spring/Summer 2006. For more information, including how to subscribe and how to submit papers, visit the Journal's website at <http://www.press.jhu.edu/journals/pchp>

Members of Community-Campus Partnerships for Health involved in the Journal include Associate Editors Lee Bone and Emmanuel Price, Editorial Board Chair Claude Earl Fox and Editorial Board Members Alex Allen, Larry Green and Meredith Minkler.

Meet Journal Editor Eric Bass and Deputy Editor Darius Tandon at the Community-Campus Partnerships for Health 9th Conference on May 31, 2006 in Minneapolis, when they will lead a pre-conference institute on "Practical

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS: COMMUNITY HEALTH SCHOLARS PROGRAM AND SCHOLARS IN HEALTH DISPARITIES PROGRAM - DEADLINE: JAN 4, 2006

The Kellogg Health Scholars Program is a joint program that combines the highly successful Community Health Scholars Program and Scholars in Health Disparities Program. This exciting, new program offers two-year postdoctoral fellowships at 10 training sites, beginning in the fall of 2006. Seven fellowships will be in the Multidisciplinary Diversities and six fellowships in the Community-Disparities track. The first track highlights a multi-disciplinary approach to studying the social determinants of health disparities. The other track highlights community-based participatory research, and relationships between academe, community and public health practice.

CCPH executive director Sarena D. Seifer serves on the program's National Advisory Committee.

WITH ENROLLMENTS RISING FOR THE 5TH CONSECUTIVE YEAR, U.S. NURSING SCHOOLS TURN AWAY MORE THAN 30,000 QUALIFIED APPLICATIONS IN 2005

The American Association of Colleges of Nursing (AACN) has released preliminary survey data which show that enrollment in entry-level baccalaureate nursing programs increased by 13.0 percent from 2004 to 2005. Though this increase is welcome, surveyed nursing colleges and universities denied 32,617 qualified applications due primarily to a shortage of nurse educators. AACN is very concerned about the increasing number of qualified students being turned away from nursing programs each year since the federal government is projecting a shortfall of 800,000 registered nurses (RNs) by the year 2020.

"With the nation's health care system calling for more baccalaureate-prepared nurses in the workforce, AACN is pleased to see that the trend toward enrollment increases has continued for the fifth consecutive year," said AACN President Jean E. Bartels. "Despite the successful efforts of schools nationwide to expand student capacity, our nations nursing schools are falling far short of meeting the current and projected demand for RNs." According to research conducted by Dr. Peter Buerhaus from Vanderbilt University, enrollments in nursing programs would have to increase by at least 40 percent annually to replace those nurses expected to leave the workforce through retirement.

AACN's annual survey is the only resource for actual (versus projected) data on enrollment and graduations reported by the nation's baccalaureate and graduate degree programs in nursing. This year's 13.0 percent increase in enrollments is based on data supplied by the same 408 schools reporting in both 2004 and 2005. This is the fifth consecutive year of enrollment increases with 14.1, 16.6, 8.1, and 3.7 percent increases in 2004, 2003, 2002, and 2001, respectively. Prior to the five-year upswing, baccalaureate nursing programs experienced six years of declining enrollments from 1995 through 2000. For a graphic depiction of enrollment changes in baccalaureate nursing programs from 1994-2005, see <http://www.aacn.nche.edu/Media/ppt/94-05EnrChgs.ppt>.

The AACN survey also found that the number of graduates from entry-level baccalaureate programs increased by 19.1 percent from 2004 to 2005. This data is based on information supplied by the same 393 schools reporting for the past two years. The recent rise in graduations follows 14, 4.3 and 3.2 percent increases in the number of graduates in 2004, 2003 and 2002, respectively. This upward trend was preceded by a six-year period of graduation declines from 1996 through 2001.

AACN's latest data confirm that interest in nursing careers continues to grow, which is good news considering the projected demand for nursing care. Last year, the U.S. Department of Labor identified Registered Nursing as the top occupation in terms of job growth through the year 2012. According to the latest projections from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, more than one million new and replacement nurses will be needed by 2012. Given the demands of today's health care system, the greatest need in the nursing workforce is for nurses prepared at the baccalaureate and higher degree levels. With the federal Health Resources and Services Administration calling for baccalaureate preparation for at least two thirds of the nursing workforce, the evidence clearly shows that higher levels of nursing education are linked with lower patient mortality rates, fewer errors, and greater job satisfaction among RNs. Nurse executives, federal agencies, the military, leading nursing organizations, health care foundations, magnet hospitals, and minority nurse advocacy groups all recognize the unique value that baccalaureate-prepared nurses bring to the practice setting and their contribution to quality nursing care.

"AACN is committed to working with the health care community to create a highly educated nursing workforce able to meet the challenges of contemporary nursing practice," added Dr. Bartels. "We strongly believe that encouraging all nurses to advance their education is in the best interest of patients and an important step toward enhancing patient safety." The robust interest in professional nursing can be attributed in part to successful outreach efforts guided by nursing schools nationwide. Strategies employed to increase student capacity this year included forming alliances with hospitals, the business community and other stakeholders to address faculty and clinical space constraints. Some schools have expanded or opened new accelerated programs for second-degree seekers looking to transition into nursing while others have taken advantage of state and federal funding aimed at strengthening the nursing workforce. In addition to these school-based initiatives, both Johnson & Johnson and the Nurses for a Healthier Tomorrow coalition continued their national media campaigns to encourage careers in nursing.

MESSAGE FROM OUR ADMINISTRATIVE DIRECTOR

Annika Robbins, CCPH Administrative Director, with students from The Network: TUFH's Student Network Organization (SNO)

Last month, I had the opportunity to participate in The Network: Towards Unity For Health's (TUFH) International Conference, "Making Primary Health Care Work: Challenges for the Education and Practice for the Health Workforce," in Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam. The Network:TUFH is a non-governmental organization in official relationships with the World Health Organization and is based at Maastricht University in the Netherlands. Founded in 1979, it is a global association of institutions for education of health professionals committed to contribute, through education, research and service, to the improvement and sustainment of health in the communities they serve.

As many will recall, in October 2004, CCPH and The Network:TUFH jointly sponsored an international conference in Atlanta, Georgia USA that explored how partnerships can overcome health disparities. For more information, visit <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/guide.html#Conf2004>

This year The Network:TUFH collaborated with the University of Medicine and Pharmacy of Ho Chi Minh City to host its conference in Vietnam. Since Vietnam is at an exciting stage of development of its health services and health professions education, it was an ideal location. Several years ago the Vietnamese government adopted the primary health care strategy to bring equitable health services throughout the nation. The result has been the development of an effective system of hospitals, health centers and health posts accessible to any patient. But only recently has the country started to realize that conventional approaches to training of its human resources for health did not match the personnel needs of Vietnam's primary care-oriented health system. Facilitated by foreign aid programs, modern paradigms for the training of human resources for health were presented and, in particular, several medical schools and schools of public health are currently implementing some of these innovative educational approaches. The achievements, challenges and policies of the health sector of Vietnam were described in a keynote address by Truong Viet Dzung of the Ministry of Health during the opening ceremony at the Reunification Palace.

At the conference I presented the activities of CCPH during the "Partnerships for Health Professions Education" thematic poster session. To give you an idea of the geographic range of participants and presenters, in the session there were also presentations on a Graduate Entry Medical Programme incorporating service-learning and community-based research at the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa; third-year medical students community integration sessions as a primary health care education tool for local health workers in Manila, at the University of the Philippines; preceptorship programs at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque; and a network of African institutions for primary healthcare training programs led by GHETS (Global Health through Education Training and Service). A key message from the session was that partnerships with key agencies help to ensure sustainability of service to communities and part of engaging in effective partnerships is sharing similar commitments, illustrated through revised mission statements and relevant action programs. To view the poster presented on CCPH, visit <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/pastpresentations.html>.

The Network:TUFH's Secretary General, Arthur Kaufmann, and Chairperson, Gerard Majoor, both CCPH members, led a session on how The Network:TUFH can best meet the needs of its members. One of the key points that came out of that session was the importance of continuing partnerships with like-minded organizations, like CCPH. One of the key priorities that CCPH has in common with The Network:TUFH is to create opportunities for members, and others working in the promotion of healthy communities and improving education, to connect with each other. Through our conferences we provide an opportunity for individuals to meet face-to-face which can be the starting point of amazing partnerships and collaborations (see the report on outcomes from our jointly sponsored 2004 conference at http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/PM_061705.html#MessageFromProgDirector). For more information on CCPH's next conference, visit <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/conf-overview.html>.

By exhibiting at The Network:TUFH's conference I was able to meet people from all over the world and learn about the incredible work that they are doing. My hope is to now be able to share these connections with CCPH members through highlighting their work on our website and in our newsletter. Cross-cultural exchanges and collaborations can be some of the most rewarding experiences and I would encourage CCPH members to attend one of The Network:TUFH's conferences to experience these firsthand. CCPH and The Network:TUFH are talking about the possibility of hosting another joint conference in the future, and exploring other mutually beneficial collaborations between our organizations.

The Network:TUFH's next International Conference, "Improving the Social Accountability in Education, Research and Service Delivery" will take place September 9-14, 2006 in Ghent, Belgium, in collaboration with the Department of Family Practice and Primary Health Care in cooperation with the Faculty of Medicine and Health Sciences, Ghent University. For more information, visit <http://www.the-networktufh.org/conference/>.

Building Capacity for Community Engagement Institutional Self- Assessment Tool Now Available!

The tool is designed for higher educational institutions (or units therein) to assess their capacity for community engagement and community-engaged scholarship and to identify opportunities for action. The tool, developed by CCPH senior consultant Sherril Gelmon, is available online at <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/pastpresentations.html> along with slides from a presentation on the tool at last month's International Service-Learning

Research Conference. The tool is being used by schools participating in the Community-Engaged Scholarship for Health Collaborative to track changes in their capacity over time. Visit the Collaborative website at <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/healthcollab.html>.

CBPR Listserv Survey Results

The results are in: "This is the most responsive and generous listserv to which I have subscribed. . . . It feels good to join a group that understands what it means to be a community." CCPH and Wellesley Central Health Corporation recently conducted a confidential online survey of subscribers to the Community-Based Participatory Research (CBPR) listserv to solicit their feedback, to help improve the listserv, and to continue to advance the field.

MEMBERS IN ACTION

Congratulations to CCPH Senior Consultant Sherril Gelmon

On November 14th, CCPH senior consultant Sherril Gelmon was presented with the annual Service-Learning Research Award "in recognition of outstanding contributions to the service-learning research field" at the 5th International Service-Learning Research Conference, held this year at Michigan State University. Please join us in extending our congratulations! (Sherril can be reached directly at gelmons@pdx.edu).

Sherril is Professor of Public Health in the Mark O. Hatfield School of Government at Portland State University and leads the evaluation of the Community-Engaged Scholarship for Health Collaborative. She also will chair the 6th Annual International Service-Learning Research Conference in Portland, OR in October 2006. Details on the conference will be announced in Partnership Matters newsletter as soon as they're available.

Sherril also gave a presentation at the conference in Michigan on "Institutional Change to Support Community-Engaged Scholarship: Testing New Methods" that focused on the assessment methods used by the Collaborative. The presentation and self-assessment tool are available at <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/pastpresentations.html>

Reproductive and Child Health Grants – Deadline: Open - Reproductive health care is the primary health need of women, yet limited resources in developing countries combined with women's economic and social position often deprive women of access to the care they need and want. Increasing access to voluntary family planning services, providing emergency obstetrical care to enable women to safely carry and deliver babies, providing a trained midwife at delivery, and preventing cervical cancer are examples of the kinds of work supported by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation. Grant making is guided by the principle that in order to achieve lasting, large-scale change, philanthropic efforts must incorporate strategies to encourage effective public investment and to leverage private sector market potential. Priority is given to investments that serve as a catalyst to quicken the pace of progress, and to efforts whose net effect is to augment, not supplant, government funding streams. <http://www.gatesfoundation.org/GlobalHealth/ReproductiveChildHealth/>

Green Foundation Seeks Grant Proposals – Deadline: Open - Established in 1994, the Green Foundation is a private, non-operating foundation that awards grants for both operating and program support. Community Building in the Twenty-First Century, edited by Stanley E. Hyland.

“Community” has long been a critical concept for social scientists, and never more so amid the growing economic inequity, natural and human disasters, and warfare of the opening years of the twenty-first century. In this volume, leading scholar-activists develop a conceptual framework for both the theory and practice of building communities. CCPH members Jean Schensul and Noel Chrisman have authored the following chapters.
