NEWS FROM CCPH

How Do We Ensure That Community-Engaged Research Actually Engages Communities & Leads to Action? Nearly 100 community leaders from across the U.S. will convene from Dec 5-7 in Boston for "Achieving the Promise of Community-Engaged Health Disparities Research: A National Community Partner Forum." Co-sponsored by CCPH and the Center for Community Health Education, Research and Service with funding from the National Institute of Minority Health and Health Disparities, the forum's agenda centers around four priority areas for action: community review of proposed research, governance structures for research, community engagement across the research process and funding the community infrastructure needed to conduct research. Kudos to CES4Health Reviewers! In just two years, <http://CES4Health.info> has published over 32 diverse products of community-engaged scholarship, including videos, policy reports, training curricula, digital stories and a cookbook! But none of this could happen without dedicated community and academic experts who volunteer their time to peer-review each product and provide helpful feedback to authors. CES4Health is giving special thanks to five reviewers who went above and beyond the call of duty by writing excellent reviews, sometimes on short notice or while taking on multiple reviews at once! An extra special thank you to Renee Bayer, Lisa Benz Scott, Ellen Lopez, Christina E. Ore de Boehm and Cassandra Ritas!

Kudos to Our Executive Director! The Community College National Center for Community Engagement (CCNCCE) has recognized CCPH executive director Sarena Seifer as one of 20 "beacons of vision, hope & action" in service-learning & civic engagement. In a letter accompanied by a beautiful handcrafted piece by master wood craftsman Jesse De La Rosa, CCNCCE Executive Director Lyvier Conss writes "I have had the pleasure of knowing you for over 15 years and throughout that time I have always been impressed at your passion and dedication to community engagement."
