CCPH MEMBER RAISES FUNDS FOR AMERICAN INDIAN & ALASKA NATIVE STUDENT PARTICIPATION IN CCPH 10TH ANNIVERSARY CONFERENCE

American Indians and Alaska Natives (AIANs) have among the highest prevalence of chronic disease in the country, and AIAN professionals are desperately needed to deliver culturally competent and relevant research in their own communities. The poor health status of many AIANs, however, stems from conditions of poverty and low access to higher education. In addition, many opportunities available to support AIANs in the health professions go untapped because of poorly funded, fragmented mentoring or recruitment programs limited in their efforts to reach out to tribal groups.

As a Senior Fellow in the Department of Medical History and Ethics at the University of Washington and a member of the Lummi Nation in Bellingham, WA, CCPH member Dr. Rose James recognized an opportunity to bring together academic and professional resources with AIAN students. In partnership with Northwest Indian College, an accredited

Submission Guidelines

We welcome announcements, comments and questions from you! Please forward them to the PM Editor at ccphpm@u.washington.edu.

Submission Guidelines:

- Please limit announcements and questions to not more than 100 words. As for articles and editorials, not more than 200 words;
- Provide the names of all authors, their current institutional affiliations and/or photos;
- Explain all abbreviations and unusual terms when first used.

tribal college chartered by Lummi, Dr. James was awarded funds through the Norcliffe Foundation to bring 4 college students to the CCPH 10th Anniversary conference this spring.

The reciprocal nature of the community-based participatory research approach to research resonates with many tribes interested in increasing community control over research that includes AIAN study subjects, data, staff, or resources. "I knew this conference would be an ideal setting for students to explore their potential in tribal health careers. The mentoring aspect also aligned with foundations that like to fund projects that have a positive impact on the local area" said Dr. James. James and NWIC have joined forces to provide two previous mentored health conference experiences in 2006 where a total of 15 AIAN students received personalized support in developing their own academic or local advocacy goals. By encouraging participation in national and international disparities discussions, this event is designed to increase partnership opportunities between tribal colleges and academic institutions while inspiring AIAN students to take control of chronic tribal health and policy issues.

Given its support for student scholarships, the Norcliffe Foundation is recognized as a CCPH conference cosponsor. Other cosponsoring organizations that have provided student scholarships include the Centre for Urban Health Initiatives at the University of Toronto, the Ontario HIV Treatment Network and an anonymous Canadian donor.

To learn more about CCPH conference cosponsor and exhibitor opportunities, visit <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/conf-exhibiting.html>. If you need a support letter for a proposal that may fund your way to the conference, email CCPH administrative director Annika Sgambelluri at annikalr@u.washington.edu

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS: PUBLIC HEALTH AND LIBERAL EDUCATION
A Curriculum and Faculty Development Project
http://www.aacu.org/public_health/index.cfm
Deadline: March 1

The Association of American Colleges and Universities (AAC&U), in partnership with the Association for Prevention Teaching and Research (APTR), is pleased to announce Public Health and Liberal Education, a project designed to help faculty members create and teach undergraduate courses that engage students with the world's major questions through the lens of public health.

In the first phase of the project, APTR and AAC&U will offer an intensive two-day curriculum and faculty development workshop to help participants design undergraduate courses in Public Health 101, Epidemiology 101, and/or Global Health 101. The workshop, pending funding, will be held July 9-10, 2007, in Washington, DC. (They are awaiting final approval of funding from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention for this project).

An understanding of public health issues is a critical component of good citizenship and a prerequisite for taking responsibility for building healthy societies. At its best, the study of public health combines the social sciences, sciences, mathematics, humanities, and the arts. At the same time, it serves as a vehicle for the development of written and oral communication skills, critical and creative thinking, quantitative and information literacy, and teamwork and problem solving. It incorporates civic knowledge and engagement--both local and global, intercultural competence, and ethical reasoning and action--while forming the foundation for lifelong learning. Workshop faculty will help participants use public health topics to implement a capacious vision of undergraduate liberal learning.

For more information, visit http://www.aacu.org/public_health/index.cfm

If you have questions about this project or the application process, please contact Kevin Hovland at hovland@aacu.org or 202-387-3760, ext. 431. Even if you choose not to apply for this current opportunity, AAC&U and APTR are eager to identify interest and need within the higher education community. Because they anticipate future faculty development workshops for public health, they will create a waiting list of those not selected this time and an "interest list" for subsequent offerings.

MESSAGE FROM OUR EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

At CCPH, we are all about partnerships that can inspire and transform. We have recently established partnerships with two national organizations around our shared goal of improving health by engaging and supporting communities as partners in research. Both provide opportunities for CCPH member involvement.

Sarena Seifer CCPH and the Education Network for Advancing Cancer Clinical Trials (ENACCT) are working together to incorporate community-based participatory research (CBPR) approaches into cancer clinical trial education and research. A non-profit organization founded in 2004, ENACCT's mission is to identify, implement and validate innovative community centered approaches to cancer clinical trials education. They believe that in order for cancer clinical trials education to be effective, it must have an ultimate focus on community empowerment – individual involvement, organizational development, and change in community cancer care. ENACCT is testing out this model of cancer clinical trials education through its Pilot Education Program funded by the Lance Armstrong Foundation.

Together, we are convening Communities as Partners in Cancer Clinical Trials: Changing Research, Practice and Policy, a 3-part conference series designed to explore the potential of employing CBPR principles in therapeutic trial design, recruitment, retention and dissemination and to define an agenda for research, practice and policy. Supported by core funding from the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality and the National Cancer Institute, the conference series will bring together invited researchers, practitioners, community leaders and patient advocates in two important yet disparate fields - cancer clinical trials and community based participatory research. Experts in these fields have much to contribute to the re-creation of clinical research practices, but have never before come together with this explicit purpose. The research, practice and policy priorities developed through this conference series have enormous potential to change the way in which cancer clinical research is conducted at the local level and how it is funded.

Planning is underway for the first conference in the series, to take place in September 2007. We are in the process of identifying possible speakers and people to write commentaries on a commissioned paper that will frame discussion at the conference. We are especially interested in identifying promising practices of community engagement in clinical trial research (whether in cancer or in other fields). We also welcome suggestions of articles and reports that can inform the development of the conference series. Please send your suggestions to CCPH program assistant Ruslan Nikitin on or before Friday February 16 by email (nikitinr@u.washington.edu), fax (206-685-6747) or mail (UW Box 354809, Seattle, WA 98195-4809).

CCPH and the Tuskegee University National Center for Bioethics in Research and Health Care (the Bioethics Center) are collaborating to meaningfully involving communities in decisions made about every aspect of research, with a particular focus on engaging Historically Black Colleges and Universities and the communities they serve. The Bioethics Center promotes racial and ethnic diversity in the field of bioethics and in public debates about bioethical issues. Established in 1999, its mission is to promote equity and justice in health and health care. The Bioethics Center is the nation's first bioethics center dedicated to addressing bioethical issues of importance to African Americans and other underserved populations. It is also the only bioethics center at a Historically Black College and University. It carries out its mission by conducting education and training programs, fostering respectful community partnerships, advancing interdisciplinary research, and advocating public policies that improve the health and health care of all Americans, particularly the underserved.

The first outcome of the partnership is a jointly sponsored Educational Conference Call Series on Institutional Review Boards and Ethical Issues in Research. The series is intended to increase understanding of the role of IRBs and other mechanisms for assuring that human subjects research is ethical and appropriate - both at individual and community levels. The aim of the series is to provide a comprehensive understanding of the options and tools necessary for communities to determine the approach that is best for them. The series will also inform the development of future initiatives undertaken by CCPH and the Bioethics Center on IRBs and ethical issues in community-campus partnerships. Dr. Vanessa Northington Gamble, Director of the Bioethics Center, will moderate the series. Online registration is now open for the first two calls. Click here for more information about the series. If you have comments and suggestions on the call series, including ideas for additional call topics, please contact the call series organizers CCPH program director Kristine Wong (Kristine@u.washington.edu) or CCPH graduate research assistant Jessica Grignon (jgrignon@u.washington.edu)

We are delighted to be collaborating with these organizations whose missions are synergistic with ours. I look forward to sharing more about the outcomes of our work together in future issues of Partnership Matters. If you have any questions, comments or suggestions, please let me know at sarena@u.washington.edu

10th ANNIVERSARY NEWS

Call for Stories of Impact Deadline: Friday, February 23, 2007

Do you have a story that captures how CCPH has had an impact on you, your partnership, and/or the field as a whole? As part of our 10th anniversary celebration this year, CCPH is producing a report that will capture historical milestones, stories of impact, and visions for the future. The report will be released at our upcoming conference, "Mobilizing Partnerships for Social Change," to be held April 11-14, 2007 in Toronto, Canada (conference details at <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/conf-overview.html>)

We are seeking "stories of impact" to feature in this report and on the CCPH website. Anyone may submit a story. We especially encourage stories co-written by community and campus partners. After reviewing your submission, you may be invited to share your story aloud through an audio-taped conversation or in person at the conference!

Your story should answer the question "how has CCPH had an impact on you, your partnership, and/or the field as a whole?" The questions below are intended as a guide only for what information you might weave into your story. Stories should not exceed 2 type-written pages.

- What brought you to CCPH originally?
- What is your role/relationship/history with CCPH?
- What influenced your decision to support, join, or get involved in CCPH?
- What have you enjoyed most about CCPH?
- How would you describe CCPH to a colleague?
- How well do you feel CCPH executes its mission of promoting health (broadly defined) through partnerships between communities and higher educational institutions?
- What are CCPH's strengths? What are its limitations?
- How might CCPH improve your experience as a member?
- What do you feel are the biggest challenges to authentic partnerships between communities and higher educational institutions?
- What is your greatest hope for CCPH going forward?
- Ten years from now what do you hope CCPH has achieved?

Stories should be sent to Kara Connors, CCPH Senior Consultant by email: kara@bridgewayhealth.net or fax: (415) 366-2124 by Friday February 23. You may also include digital photos or drawings. Be sure to include your name, email and phone number. Please also indicate whether you plan to attend the conference in Toronto.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

National Forum on Higher Education for the Public Good Launches New Website -

Although the address remains the same: <http://www.thenationalforum.org/>, the appearance and organization have changed dramatically. The National Forum's mission is to significantly increase awareness, understanding, commitment, and action relative to the public service role of higher education in the United States. If you have any comments or questions, please contact nationalforum@umich.edu or (734) 615-8882.

AHRQ Releases Annual Quality, Disparities Reports - The Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ) has released its 2006 National Healthcare Quality Report and the 2006 National Healthcare Disparities Report, which together track trends across a broad array of measures of health care quality and access for many racial and ethnic minority groups and socioeconomic groups. The quality report addresses the current state of health care quality as a whole, while the disparities report focuses on the variations in quality and access across different populations.

Nominations Invited for Editor of American Journal of Community Psychology –

Deadline: May 31 - Nominations are invited for Editor of the American Journal of Community Psychology (AJCP), the official journal of the Society for Community Research and Action. The goals of the journal are to foster scholarly dialogue and debate around issues of theory, empirical research, and intervention in the field of community psychology; to document the work of community psychology and to influence its evolution; to foster an understanding of the interdependence of research and practice; and to seek out ways to engage varied perspectives in scholarly debate. The successful editor should have a broad understanding of community psychology, a substantial record of publication, and experience in manuscript review and editorial work. Consistent with the values of the discipline, the successful editor should have demonstrated commitment to and valuing of diversity, multiculturalism, and international perspectives. The next Editor will assume her/his position in January 2009 as Editor-elect to allow smooth transition to the Editorship in January 2010. For more information, contact Jean Ann Linney at Linney.1@nd.edu

Service-Learning: A Movement's Pioneers Reflect on Its Origins, Practice, and Future

In this fascinating collection of stories, leaders in service-learning describe their early efforts to combine education with social action. Their reflections help construct a pedagogy of service-learning that will inspire newcomers and guide program development. The authors assess pioneering experiences and recommend steps for future policy and practice, emphasizing the critical need to preserve an activist commitment as programs become increasingly institutionalized. This highly readable book will assist academic leaders, faculty members, student services professionals, educational researchers, adult educators, and public policymakers who seek a common understanding of the origins, purposes, and objectives of this vital learning initiative.

Medical Apartheid: The Dark History of Medical Experimentation on Black Americans from Colonial Times to the Present

From the era of slavery to the present day, the first full history of black America's shocking mistreatment as unwilling and unwitting experimental subjects at the hands of the medical establishment.

Medical Apartheid is the first and only comprehensive history of medical experimentation on African Americans. Starting with the earliest encounters between black Americans and Western medical researchers and the racist pseudoscience that resulted, it details the ways both slaves and freedmen were used in hospitals for experiments conducted without their knowledge—a tradition that continues today within some black populations. It reveals how blacks have historically been prey to grave-robbing as well as unauthorized autopsies and dissections. Moving into the twentieth century, it shows how the pseudoscience of eugenics and social Darwinism was used to justify experimental exploitation and shoddy medical treatment of blacks, and the view that they were biologically inferior, oversexed, and unfit for adult responsibilities. Shocking new details about the government's notorious Tuskegee experiment are revealed, as are similar, less-well-known medical atrocities conducted by the government, the armed forces, prisons, and private institutions.

Healing Our Differences: The Crisis of Global Health and the Politics of Identity

Collins O. Airhihenbuwa asserts that the public health mission and the question of an individual identity are inseparable. Airhihenbuwa deftly explains how the rise in a more uniform, apolitical view of healthcare and health services leads to the devaluation of individual cultures and communities that in turn leads to inequality in the outcome of health care.
