NEWS FROM THE CCPH CONFERENCE HELD MAY 31 – JUNE 3 IN MINNEAPOLIS!

See Message From Our Executive Director for Details

THE REACH 2010: CHARLESTON AND GEORGETOWN DIABETES COALITION IS THE RECIPIENT OF THE 2006 CCPH ANNUAL AWARD!

The award, announced during the closing session of CCPH's 9th conference on June 3rd, highlights the power and potential of partnerships between communities and higher educational institutions as a strategy for improving health. Selected from a competitive pool of nominations, the REACH 2010: Charleston and Georgetown Diabetes Coalition is a partnership between the Charleston and Georgetown communities and the Medical University of South Carolina (MUSC) College of Nursing that is eliminating disparities for African Americans with diabetes through community action, health systems change, and collaboration.

"The Coalition demonstrates how community-campus partnerships can contribute to significant health outcomes. The Coalition's focus on community-driven education and systems change, supported by trusting relationships, democratic governing structures and equitable sharing of power and resources are hallmarks of this exemplary partnership that others can aspire to," noted CCPH Executive Director Sarena D. Seifer in presenting the award. Accepting the award on behalf of the partnership were Virginia Thomas, Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority and REACH Community Health Advisor, North Charleston and Carolyn Jenkins, Professor of Nursing and Ann Darlington Edwards Endowed Chair of Nursing at MUSC College of Nursing.

This year's award was supported by Jossey-Bass/Wiley Publishers and two journals: Progress in Community Health Partnerships: Research, Education and Action and the Journal of Higher Education Outreach and Engagement. Also announced at the conference were three partnerships that received recognition as honorable mentions: The Brazos Valley Health Partnership, the Stepping Up Project and the Flint Healthcare Employment Opportunities Project. Read the press release and see photos of the award winner "in action" at photos of the award winner "in action" at <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/awards2006-reach2010.html>.

- Explain all abbreviations and unusual terms when first used.

FIRST ISSUE OF CONTEXT, THE ONLY PEER-REVIEWED ELECTRONIC JOURNAL FOR HEALTH PROFESSIONAL STUDENTS ENGAGED IN THEIR COMMUNITIES

CCPH board member Carmen Patrick serves as Editor-in-Chief

Health Students Taking Action Together (HealthSTAT) has announced the debut of the inaugural issue of the only peer-reviewed electronic journal for health professional students engaged in their communities. Context connects students across the nation working to improve the health of our communities. In addition, the journal recognizes insightful, well-designed evaluations of student initiated programs from a variety of perspectives.

The journal's management team is accepting rolling manuscript submissions and applications for editors and peer reviewers. The journal is being published bi-annually. To submit a manuscript or to sign up for a free subscription, visit www.contextjournal.org

A rigorous peer review process ensures that articles meet high standards in terms of theoretical and methodological rigor. As an open access journal, Context offers the health professional community the opportunity to make research results freely available immediately on publication, and permanently available in public archives. Subscribers to Context benefit from the e-journal's multimedia capabilities and all articles and transcripts will be available for download.

For more information, contact Dana M. Lee, Publisher, 678-637-6923

MESSAGE FROM OUR EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Sarena Seifer

Community-Campus Partnerships for Health's 9th conference held last week in Minneapolis was, in the words of one participant, "A life-changing experience." The conference, "Walking the Talk: Achieving the Promise of Authentic Partnerships" drew an incredibly diverse group of participants for 4 days of skill-building, networking and agenda-setting. About 450 CCPH members from 40 states, DC, Canada, Australia, Germany, Ghana, India, The Netherlands, Nigeria and South Africa were in attendance. Community participation was at its highest this year, thanks to funding provided by the WK Kellogg Foundation, the Otto Bremer Foundation, the Northwest Health Foundation and the Wellesley Institute. Thanks to an incredible conference planning committee and staff team led by CCPH Administrative Director Annika Sgambelluri, the conference was by all accounts a success!

This article is part one of a 2-part series on the conference. Part two will appear in the next issue of Partnership Matters on June 23rd. Yes, there's that much to say!

On Wednesday May 31, conference participants took part in one of five pre-conference institutes that covered such topics as "Engaging Campuses as Authentic Partners: Tips & Strategies for Community Leaders," "Essentials of Service-Learning Partnerships," and "Making Your Best Case for Promotion and/or Tenure: A Toolkit for Community-Engaged Faculty Members.” Another group spent the day learning about community-campus partnerships and rural health workforce development in Willmar, Minnesota, located 100 miles west of the Twin Cities.

On Wednesday evening, participants boarded buses to the Weisman Art Museum for the conference opening reception sponsored by the University of Minnesota Academic Health Center. This Frank Gehry-designed building provided a lovely setting for conversation and camaraderie. Welcome remarks were provided by Susan Gust, CCPH board member and local community activist, Barbara Brandt, Vice President of Education for the Academic Health Center, and John Finnegan, Dean of the School of Public Health.

The conference began on Thursday June 1 with a presentation by Loretta Jones that challenged us all to strive for authenticity of our relationships between community and campus. She drew on her experiences as founding executive director of Healthy African American Families II, a non-profit, community serving agency whose mission is to improve the health outcomes of the African American and Latino communities in Los Angeles County. The organization has partnerships with Charles Drew University, University of California-Los Angeles, University of Southern California and the RAND Corporation, all designed to create lasting effects in health policy and practice that will enhance the health status of the community. Among her many points and words of wisdom, she stressed the importance of signing memorandums of agreement or understanding that spell out rights and responsibilities that all partners agree to, and pointed to an example from her agency at <http://www.witness4wellness.org/council/agreement.html>. She also referred to the importance of establishing partnerships with organizations and institutions and not just particular people, because people “get on and off the bus” as their priorities change. She also acknowledged that not all are cut out for partnership work, noting that “not all researchers should be in communities.”

Skill-building workshops, story sessions and thematic poster sessions took place throughout the conference. I encourage you to scan the abstracts at <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/conf-agenda.html> to get a sense of the range, scope and accomplishments of community-campus partnerships.

Another highlight of the day was Part 1 of the 2-part Issue Thrash sessions. The series provides participants an opportunity to explore shared issues and challenges, come away with fresh ideas and new strategies to help meet those challenges, and have their opinions heard on a national level by recommending ways that CCPH and other stakeholders can be supportive. A summary of these sessions, including resources and recommendations, will be posted on the CCPH website shortly at www.ccph.info and included in the conference proceedings, along with edited versions of all plenary sessions and articles based on selected concurrent sessions. The proceedings will be published as this year’s issue of CCPH’s peer-reviewed, online open access publication Partnership Perspectives.

Friday June 1 began with one of the more popular features of the conference: community site visits. Participants learned in-depth from local partnerships by spending about three hours touring and talking with the partnership’s major stakeholders. This year, participants had a choice of 17 different community site visits, an impressive array of innovative community-campus partnerships in the Twin Cities (each described at <http://depts.washington.edu/ccph/conf-sitevisits.html>). Participants returned to the hotel for lunch and a group reflection facilitated by CCPH board member Chuck Conner.

An informational session on CCPH held in the afternoon introduced participants to the CCPH board and staff and presented the organization’s history and evolution, programs, resources and opportunities for involvement. Click here [link to PDF: ccphoverview506] for the corresponding PowerPoint session. Four CCPH members spoke about why they joined CCPH, how they became involved and what the benefits have been: Ella Greene-Moton, Community-Academic Consultant and CCPH board chair-elect, Flint MI; Ruth Nemire, Director of Community Engagement, NOVA Southeastern University College of Pharmacy, Ft. Lauderdale, FL; Anna Huff, Project Director, Mid performance Delta Community Consortium, West Helena, AR; and Rohinee Lal, Community Liaison Coordinator, Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, BC Canada. One opportunity for involvement is serving on the 2007 conference planning committee. If you are interested, contact Annika Sgambelluri at annikalr@u.washington.edu.

The day ended with a Cocktail Poster Session and Exhibitor Reception featuring over 80 posters and exhibits. Midway through the evening, we enjoyed a special performance by the local Danza Mexica Cuauhtemoc Dancers, whose traditional dances and costumes are based in the ancient tradition of honoring the earth, youth and elders, and building community. You missed an exhilarating show! For more information, visit <http://www.cuauhtemoc.org/>

On Saturday June 3, we examined the perspectives that funding agencies bring to the whole arena of community-campus partnerships. A plenary panel featured representatives of 4 funding agencies. Below are excerpts of their remarks.

Joan Cleary, Associate Director of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Minnesota Foundation (www.bluecrossmn.com/foundation) emphasized the importance of partnerships to achieving the social change needed to create healthier communities. The Foundation provided a grant to the Healthcare Education and Industry Partnership (HEIP), a program of the Minnesota State Colleges and Universities, to support the development of a standardized training curriculum for community health workers (CHWs) through the state's community college system. The Foundation's successful nomination of HEIP under the Local Initiatives Funding Partnership led to a planning grant by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Through these efforts, the Foundation is serving as a catalyst to promote the use of CHWs as a strategy for improving health care cultural competence, addressing training and Minnesota's health care work force shortage and reducing health disparities.

Sarah Flicker, Director of Research at the Wellesley Institute in Toronto, ON Canada (www.wellesleyinstitute.com), noted that when reviewing proposals, Wellesley peer reviewers rate the potential impact of a project. Is it of sufficient scope to offer broad learning? Does it have a dissemination plan that reaches multiple audiences in appropriate formats? "It's fine to have a plan to submit articles for peer-reviewed publications. But we also look for dissemination products and strategies that will reach the intended audience. A 20-page report will not reach many youth, but an interactive website or theatre piece might." Potential impact is also assessed in terms of the link to action. Sarah cited The Street Health Report as an example. Homeless people have largely been excluded from government census health surveys, which depend on people having an address or telephone number. The 1992 Street Health report was a groundbreaking piece of research which documented the health status and the barriers faced by homeless people in accessing health care. This report was the first of its kind in North America and continues to be cited today. Street Health is now conducting research to create the 2006 Street Health Report. The project is surveying 350 homeless men and women in Toronto about their health status, well-being and access to social services and health care. The resulting report will provide a sound evidence-base of knowledge to inform and strengthen advocacy efforts.

Cheryl Maurana, Director of the Healthier Wisconsin Partnership Program (HWPP) in Milwaukee, WI (www.mcw.edu/healthierwisconsin), emphasized the role that funders, including HWPP, can play in being a partner and change agent in effecting systemic changes that can improve health. She also observed a number of pitfalls in applications that have not been funded, including: A lack of clear project purpose or plan; unbalanced or unacceptable leadership; a history of conflict among key interests; unrealistic goals with unattainable timelines; hurried or forced relationships; ineffective communication; overburdened financial commitments; ill-distributed responsibility; and exclusivity/silo-thinking.

Terri D. Wright, Program Director at the WK Kellogg Foundation in Battle Creek, MI, (www.wkkf.org) discussed how community-campus partnerships and community-based participatory research are strategic approaches to operationalizing the Foundation's mission. She challenged the audience to take their partnerships to the next level. "There is adoption of the concept of community-campus partnerships, but we are not taking it as far as it needs to go. There have been advances in the academic community, where the paradigm has opened up to begin to include CBPR. For example, we now have a new journal to publish CBPR that the Foundation is supporting [see below for details]. What is missing is the social action, the policy and systems changes that are needed to achieve health and economic equity," she stated. "We need to reinfuse this social justice mission."

She indicated that the Foundation's grant making in this arena has evolved over the years based on the lessons it has learned. "We have found that in many cases, when our funding to universities ends, the partnership or program ends. We now emphasize the community over the campus. Communities hold the knowledge and have an infinite understanding of the issues," she emphasized. "Health requires community leadership and engagement. These are central to what partnerships should be fostering, not by-products."

During the closing dinner and awards ceremony, the REACH 2010 Charleston and Georgetown Diabetes Coalition was presented with the 5th Annual CCPH Award.

In my next column, I'll highlight remarks made by closing keynote speaker Angela Glover Blackwell, CEO of PolicyLink, the poster award winners and reflections on the conference as a whole. In the meantime, mark your calendars NOW for next year's CCPH 10th Anniversary Conference, April 11-14, 2007 in Toronto ON Canada!

Community-Based Learning: Engaging Students for Success and Citizenship

This new report highlights the value of the community-based learning approach to improving academic outcomes, including test scores, attendance rates, and graduation rates, as well as personal, social, and work-related outcomes. Research shows that as many as 60% of all students are disengaged from learning and that this is a key factor in the dropout rate. How do we combat this disengagement? Community-based Learning addresses these issues by involving students in real-world problem solving that ignites the imagination and the intellect of our young people. To read the report go to

Inside and Out: Universities and Education for Sustainable Development

CCPH Member Linda Silka, Director of the University of Massachusetts-Lowell Center for Family Work and Community, examines the question of how does a university restructure its myriad activities, maintain its academic integrity, and have a transformative impact off campus? The perspective of this book, based on research and projects in the field, is that long-term, sustainable social and economic development requires strategies geared toward the scientific, technical, cultural, and environmental aspects of development.

The book is being offered at:

New Journal: Social Medicine

The Department of Family and Social Medicine at Montefiore Medical Center and Albert Einstein College of Medicine is very pleased to announce the inauguration of an open-access journal entitled Social Medicine.

Social Medicine is an international, open-access, peer-reviewed academic forum for the development and promotion of social medicine. The inaugural issue is in English, but a Spanish-language translation will appear soon. By the end of the year they anticipate publishing quarterly with simultaneous English and Spanish editions.
