

Visiting Lecturer in Anthropology at Wofford College

Wofford College's Department of Sociology and Anthropology seeks to appoint an anthropologist for the 2015-2016 school year. Rank is open.

Candidates with expertise in ecology, health, conservation, and justice are especially welcome. Candidates should have research experience in geographical regions outside of the United States and Europe.

Candidates should be willing to participate in the Wofford's efforts to increase diversity within our own college community, and to prepare our students for living in a globalized world.

The successful candidate will teach 3 courses in the fall, 1 course in the January term, 3 courses in the spring, and will collaborate in the spring semester senior capstone course. The candidate will teach a combination of catalog courses and courses in her expertise. The term of employment is 9 months.

We invite candidates to submit a cover letter, curriculum vitae, and evidence of successful teaching (i.e., statement of teaching philosophy and sample syllabi from either a course the candidate has already taught or one she plans to teach at Wofford). Send these materials electronically to fowlerct@wofford.edu by the closing date of March 27, 2015.

Wofford College is a private liberal arts institution founded in 1854 with about 1,500 undergraduates. The Department of Sociology and Anthropology has 3 full time faculty and 20+ majors. The department's faculty participate in interdisciplinary programs, including African-American Studies, Medical Humanities, Environmental Studies, Biology, Intercultural Studies, Gender Studies, Cultures and Peoples, and emerging programs in Asian Studies and Middle Eastern and North African Studies.
