Under “Family Activities:” are three items that screen for parental depression. Two or more positive answers (meaning the parent endorsed a troubling behavior) are considered a positive screen. When present, it may be helpful to explore other symptoms such as changes in appetite, weight, sleep, activities, energy level, ability to concentrate, feelings of hopelessness, and thoughts and plans about suicide. Reassurance about the frequency of depression is helpful, as is noting the availability of various treatment options such as psychologists, psychiatrists, family doctors, internists, and support groups.

Under “Drinking and Drugs:” are seven questions that screen for parental substance abuse. A positive response to any of the first six is considered a positive screen. This should be met with further questions about frequency of use, impact on the family, and impression of the effects of parental drinking on children. Physicians’ advice to quit smoking is often highly effective, but it may be unlikely that abuse of other substances can be eliminated as easily. Referrals for further assessment and treatment should be made.

Under “Family Health Habits:” there are four questions assessing domestic violence. Parents who respond positively to any of these should receive further counseling, including exploration of the extent and patterns of violence, and safety issues for children (including gun storage). Parents may need assistance making escape plans and should be referred to hotlines or shelters. Clinicians should affirm that domestic violence is wrong, but not uncommon. Victims need follow-up visits and ongoing support, even if they return to the batterer. Forming a therapeutic relationship around the child’s safety and well-being is recommended, since children are at risk for physical abuse in homes where there is domestic violence.

Under “When You Were a Child:” are eight questions assessing parents’ history of abuse. Such backgrounds predispose parents to disciplinary practices that may be abusive or too permissive. Positive responses to any of the first four questions are considered a positive screen. The last four questions help gather additional information about disciplinary techniques and parents’ need for counseling and parent training.

Under “Help and Support:” are questions assessing social support, a strong factor in reducing life and parenting stresses. Adequate social support helps ensure appropriate models for parenting practices and social control on disciplinary techniques. A positive screen is determined from the first three questions as having an average of fewer than two supportive persons or being less than very satisfied with their support. Referrals to parenting groups, social work services, home visitor programs, or community family support services are warranted.

Family Psychosocial Screening also assesses a number of other risk factors for developmental and behavior problems. These include frequent household moves, single parenting, three or more children in the home, less than a high school education, and unemployment. Four or more such risk factors, including mental health problems and an authoritarian parenting style (observed when parents use commands excessively or are negative and less than responsive to child-initiated interests) is associated with a substantial drop in children’s intelligence and subsequent school achievement. In such cases, children should also be referred for early stimulation programs such as Head Start or a quality day care or preschool program.
