GPSS Spotlight and Discussion: UW Green Dot Bystander Intervention Program

Chris L: Thanks Chris. Hello everyone. Moving right along, our GPSS Spotlight today is a very special guest. We have Natalie Dolci from UWPD talking about the UW Green Dot Bystander Intervention program, which is something that we’re going to be working along with next year especially during orientations during the fall. We thought we would at least introduce and get things moving for people that will be here next year to keep the continuity going.

Natalie Dolci (UWPD Victim Advocate): Thanks for having me. So my name is Natalie Dolci and I’m the victim advocate at the University of Washington. I’m not an officer. I’m a social worker. I assist victims of crimes by giving them the resources they need that can be anything from safety planning and connecting people with counseling to assisting people with restraining orders and court orders. Most of the people that I work with are survivors of relationship violence, sexual

GPSS Spotlight: Presentation

Hailey Mackay
Landscape Architecture
Landscape Architecture?

landscape ar·chi·tec·ture  noun
the art and practice of designing the outdoor environment, especially designing parks or gardens together with buildings and roads.

Outdoor space is a matrix of different factors, a landscape architect must understand and consider all of these components and more:

Scale: working between regional, city, neighborhood and park or garden scales...as well as detailed human scale components

Use: a landscape should be approachable and have functional use year-round and over time

Accessibility: movement into, out of and through a space is always facilitated by the landscape, this includes ADA access

Aesthetic: to be enjoyed, a landscape should be aesthetically pleasing (subjective)

Health: a healthy landscape facilitates positive human use as well as thriving environments and ecological systems

Climate mitigation: it is the landscape’s job to mitigate climate impacts such as stormwater and provide outdoor shelter from the elements
