Impact of Comorbid Anxiety Disorders in Adolescents with Asthma
Role on Project: Co-Investigator

The goals of this study are to compare: 1) adolescents with panic disorder and asthma to those with asthma alone in order to measure the personal, familial and societal impact of panic comorbidity; 2) adolescents with asthma with one or more anxiety or depressive disorder to adolescents with asthma alone in order to measure the impact of anxiety/depression on the same outcomes as in goal #1. A secondary descriptive aim will be to estimate the prevalence of panic disorder and other important anxiety and affective disorders in a population-based sample of 1,300 12- to 17-year-olds with asthma enrolled in an HMO.

Adolescent Psychopathology: Implications of Co-morbidity 5/1/08- 4/30/12
The purpose of this research is to explicate the development of depressive, conduct and comorbid problems by studying adolescents as they move into a period of marked increase in risk for depressive and conduct disorders and marked gender differentiation in the occurrence of depression. Adolescent psychopathology and related constructs will be assessed in a racially diverse community-based sample of girls and boys that was well-characterized via multiple assessments in 6th-8th grades. The sample of 450 adolescents and parents/guardians will undergo in-home interviews in the 10th and 11th grades. Both dimensional and categorical approaches will be used to explicate pathways from signs of psychopathology manifesting in early adolescence towards the development of specific and multiple forms of psychopathology in late adolescence.
