

MĀHINA

INTERNATIONAL INDIGENOUS HEALTH RESEARCH SUMMER TRAINING PROGRAM SUMMER 2015 IN HAWAII AND NEW ZEALAND

Interested in a career in health research? Want to learn more about health and research in indigenous communities? Want to spend 10-12 weeks in Hawaii and New Zealand? Want to be mentored by top indigenous health researchers focused on the health and wellness of indigenous people next summer?

If yes, then apply to be a part of Māhina!

About Māhina

Māhina exposes students interested in health research careers to Indigenous approaches to wellness, and onsite immersion and research learning opportunities with Indigenous peoples.

Trainees will learn about social, cultural, and historical determinants of Indigenous health; community based participatory/tribal participatory research (CBPR) and culturally-based health promotion and disease prevention interventions

Trainees will explore culturally specific Indigenous epistemologies, methodologies, and research protocols. Trainees, per cultural customs of the Māori, will be assigned a “sibling” graduate student mentors (Tuakana).

Māhina provides funding for airfare, travel, housing, stipend and tuition for trainees.

Eligibility

Must be enrolled at UW Spring Quarter 2015. Must be a 3rd, 4th or 5th year undergraduate student with at least a 3.0 GPA, or a graduate student.
