Communications 202

Autumn 2007 marks the inauguration of a research network at the University of Washington that brings together faculty and graduate students interested in:

- the history of science, its socio-cultural formation, its institutional contexts
- what counts as scientific knowledge and what distinguishes it as scientific
- framework assumptions and philosophical underpinnings
- research integrity: ethical obligations, accountability, norms of practice
- democratizing science: transformative criticism, collaborative practice
- the impact of science on our lives

If you're interested in these issues please join us at the first Science Studies Network colloquium meeting on Monday, October 1, 2007 in CMU 202 from 12:00-1:20 pm. Subsequent Autumn Quarter 2007 colloquium meetings will be held at the same time and location. Lunch is provided if you reserve your place in advance at www.simpsoncenter.org/science.
