From the Director

“My starting point was simply to write a play about women’s lives in the North of Ireland. What I eventually wrote was a play about four very particular women in West Belfast and it was the product of a lot of laughs, a lot of whiskey and a score of stories. I’d worked in and visited Belfast on and off over five years. When I visited the areas of town that are really touched by war I stayed with families doing what families do anywhere in the world.

I don’t think the battles women fight or the daily struggles they have are different to those in any other area with bad housing or high unemployment except that guns make a difference to everything. But this isn’t a story about guns. It’s the story of four bold women.”

- Rona Munro

This play is for bold people everywhere who are living their lives, “doing what families do” in the presence of guns and violence.
