

Dr. Ileana M. Rodríguez-Silva is an assistant professor of Latin American and Caribbean history at the University of Washington-Seattle since 2004. She earned a B.A. from the Universidad de Puerto Rico-Río Piedras. She holds an M.A. in Latin American Studies and another in Latin American History from the University of Wisconsin-Madison where she also completed a History Ph.D. in 2004. Rodríguez-Silva's research focuses on racial identity formation, post-emancipation racial politics, and comparative colonial arrangements in the configuration of empires. She is the author of "Exploring the Lives of Freedwomen: Choices, Family, and Gender during the Processes of Emancipation in Puerto Rico, 1873-1876" in Gender and Slave Emancipation in Comparative Perspective, Diana Paton and Pamela Scully, eds. (Durham: Duke University Press, 2005). Currently, she is completing a book manuscript entitled "Conspiracy of Silence: Blackness, Colonial Regimes, and National Struggles in Post-Emancipation Puerto Rico (1850-1920)," (under contract with Duke University Press). Rodríguez-Silva is also working on an interdisciplinary project with UW Prof. Kiko Benítez on the formation of modern imperial fields in Southeast Asia and the Caribbean. She is a Ford Foundation 2008-09 Post-Doctoral Fellow.
