Matinees Tomorrow
 WILKES and all vaudeville and motion picture theatres.

THIS week's new vaudeville program at the Pantages embraces three performers who class as Seattle favorites: Lottie Mayer, Beatrice McKenzie and Franz Adelman. Miss Mayer is her regular act that is as good as a vaudeville turn of that sort can be made. She has four girls who dance to Schubert's "Moment Musical" and other tunes and then go into a series of dives, while Miss Mayer herself is particularly graceful and proficient in the aquatic portion of the entertainment.

Beatrice McKenzie played her parts here with the famous Gaiety Opera Company at Cordova's and the Seattle Theatre twenty-five years ago. In bills like "The Black Hussar" and "The Mikado," when Kit Calloun, Douglas Flint, George Lyndon and many other popular players made the organization notable. She progressed from comic opera to Mason & Mason in "Madame and Adolph" and "The Vaudeville," and now has the best act in which she has yet been seen here, "Birdland," with good songs by herself and the writing by a pretty girl she carries.

Adelman, who has led many Seattle and San Francisco choruses, plays a Hungarian melody, "Mother Machee" and other selections artistically.

"Loves and Lovers" is a real estate comedy, with Joseph Greenwald in the role that Phil White played here a year ago, as well as other vaudeville acts. Brooke and Powers are back with their hilarious blackface comedy and Johnny Singer and two girls open a new bill with dancing that is most easy to watch.

Death of Junie McCree.
 New York dispatches yesterday told of the death there of Junie McCree, 52 years old, an actor and writer of comedies. McCree was really one of the best known of the old-time vaudevillians. He was in the picture when he was known as the varieties. He played in Seattle at John Cort's Standard Theatre the month of his death, July, 1899, and came again in 1911.

He wrote a number of the monologues, talking by himself and skits, which he introduced in the past few seasons.

Emmy Destinn Interred.
 If you have missed Emmy Destinn of late, the reason is here set forth. The noted pianist and singer, who died in the Moore two years ago, is now interred in her castle in Austria-Hungary. Destinn could have got away from Bohemia when the war broke out had she hastened, but she waited away her allotted time and was then forbidden to leave.

St. Denis in Vaudeville.
 Ruth St. Denis will make her re-appearance in vaudeville soon, but without Ted Shawn. She will be assisted by one of the best comedians in the city in the Loie Fuller and will offer a program that will include the Peacock, Nautch, Sea and Cobra dances.

Bobby Lawrence Heard From.
 Not much has been heard here in recent years by Robert Webb Lawrence—the Bob Webb of the old S. A. C. Since his success as a vaudeville comedian at the Loie Fuller Theatre, or nine years ago.

Destinn's name writes from Brooklyn that several years ago Lawrence married Zulie Jensen, an actress seen here in "Foggy From Paris," and that they now have a black-eyed baby now to keep the house lively. Lawrence himself is in vaudeville this season.

Patriotic to Attend Shows.
 Eastern newspapers are calling attention to the fact that it is an economy to stay away from the theatres in war times, a cheerful frame of mind being an essential for winning the war. What is more important, says The New York Journal, "such economy is not only unwise, it is extremely ungrateful, since our actors, managers, owners of theatres are called upon to contribute to charities of every kind, and for to disaster at home or abroad the first call is upon the theatre."

"For necessary to give happiness to children at Christmas time the first demand is upon the actors—in the nation, and cheerfulness means success."

"The theatre means cheerfulness in the nation, and cheerfulness means success."

The actor is one of the nation's hardest workers, one whose career as a rule is made short by difficult, exacting work that eats up youth rapidly. It is an actor's duty to the public and always responds. He deserves from the public the generous response that he always gives to the public."

STUDENTS URGED TO KEEP AT WORK

University of Washington men are urged to stay in college until called for selective service by the government, in a statement given yesterday by President Henry Suzzallo.

"We are urging our students to remain in the university until they are called for selective service," said Suzzallo. "This is indirectly in line with the policy of the federal government. We feel that we can do this in all justice to the students, because we have greatly improved the opportunity of the university to give thoroughly efficient military training. Besides the commandant, we have added twelve captain instructors, and we have raised the hours devoted to military training from three to eight. We are expanding the curriculum along every desirable line of military training."

CLERGY QUITS ADVERTISING
