Hun Spy Tries to Poison Minds of Editors From Mexico on Visit to City

Guests of United States Government Visit Shipyard and Enjoy Trip Round Waterfront—Amazed at Seattle's Enterprise

THE spy never sleeps.

In Seattle, Sunday night, he was at work among the twenty Mexican editors here as guests of the United States government. His work was to counteract the effect produced among the Mexican newspaper men by their trip of thousands of miles during which they learned to like the people of the States and to admire the spirit of patriotism found upon all sides.

The object of the trip was to promote friendliness between the two republics. Coming here Sunday night with a feeling that the best friends of Mexico live in the United States, the visitors were confronted by the spy.

"He didn't give his name," said L. D. Walker, one of the party, and editor of the paper published in Monterey. "He spoke Spanish and told us that 300 or 400 Mexican citizens were being held in the Seattle jail. Naturally we wanted to know the truth."

Piloted by the publicity committee from the Seattle Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club the editors were taken in automobiles from the New Washington Hotel to the Skinner & Eddy plant. First the party saw the laying of a keel; next a ship half finished and finally one that has been recently launched. In the great workshops it was difficult to keep the party together, so varied were the interests in the automatic riveters and tremendous trip hammers.

Long Ceased to Wonder.

"I don't know whether I am amazed or not," said one of the editors. "I have long ceased to wonder at things done by the people of the United States. We have reached the point where we can believe any thing we hear of industrial activities in this country. But, it is hard to even imagine that this great plant has been constructed in one year's time."

At the conclusion of the visit to the shipbuilding plant, John W. Eddy invited the party aboard his private yacht Lydia, where arrangements had been made for their comfort. Here in the spacious cabin of the Lydia, the spy's work again became apparent. The Mexicans gathered together in groups and at times the discussion became heated. Lieut. P. S. OReilly, U. S. N. R., who is conducting the trip, in determining the comfort of his guests, learned for the first time of the spy's work.

"We want to know about the 400 Mexicans in jail," demanded one of the editors. "We can't enjoy the trip, knowing that our countrymen may be behind bars in this city."

It was then that Lieutenant O'Reilly heard of the nightly visit of the German agent. He at once made plans to investigate. Members of the reception committee on board the yacht assured the lieutenant that the statement was false and promised proof of their assurance when a telephone was reached.

Get Good View of Waterfront.

The party was enabled to get a good view of Seattle's waterfront from the deck of the Lydia. A hasty visit was paid to the Duthie and Ames plants and the yacht rounded West Point into Salmon Bay. Some of the Mexican editors saw the workings of water locks for the first time when the boat went through the canal into Lake Washington.

At the Naval Training Station at the University of Washington the cadet band greeted the Lydia as she docked. As the editors landed they were surprised and pleased when the band played the Mexican national anthem. Commander Miller Freeman led the way to the mess hall, where luncheon was served. Lieutenant O'Reilly was on land about thirty seconds when he started after the spy. He went to the telephone and inquired of the chief of police and the sheriff.

"The statement that 400 Mexicans are in the city jail is a foolish lie," said the chief of police. "There may be one or two Mexicans here. We have men of all nationalities."

Lieutenant O'Reilly immediately told the Mexicans of his investigations and the members of the party were then able to enjoy the wholesome meal prepared by the Naval Training Camp cooks.

"Imagine a delegation of citizens from the United States visiting Mexico City," said Manuel Carpio, from Monterey. "Then imagine this delegation learning that 400 Americans were held in jail. It is then not difficult to imagine the Americans' feelings. We are glad to learn that the statement was a lie. It's another item for our notebooks and it shows the means that have been used to promote a feeling of unfriendliness between this country and our own."

Commander Freeman presided at the luncheon. He welcomed the guests and introduced President Henry Suzzallo of the university as the first speaker. "True democracy," said Dr. Suzzallo, "depends upon education of the people day by day. There are two kinds of education, the first being that which is given by teachers in the public institutions of learning. The second is more important; it's the education given out through the daily press by the journalist. The journalist is the man who moulds."

The common people of both republics, he said, are fundamentally sound. There are at times selfish politicians who influence the nations, but the newspapers are the means by which the readjustment comes. "We are both republics and we are both striving to reach the same mountain top—true democracy," he said. "What difference does it make if for a time we start up different roads? We are both after the same goal."

Must Join Hands.

L. D. Walker of Monterey, who responded in behalf of the editors, declared the members of his party wished to thank Seattle for the splendid reception given them. "When speaking of our trip I can think of but one word—amazement," he said. "We are amazed at the enterprise shown in the United States. We are amazed at the wonderful display of patriotism and at the willingness to sacrifice everything to win the war. Mexico and the United States must join hands. We have the same interests, live on the same continent, and we are both striving for true democracy."

Samuel Collyer, in behalf of the Chamber of Commerce, welcomed the guests. He assured them that a friendly feeling for Mexico exists in Seattle and he expressed the hope that friendliness will develop to a great extent between the two republics.

From the naval station the editors were taken on an automobile tour of Seattle's residence section.

At 7 o'clock last evening the Mexicans were guests of honor at a banquet given in the Country Club. Albert J. Rhodes, president of the Chamber of Commerce, presided as toastmaster. The editors were welcomed by an address given in their own language by Prof. C. M. Strong of the University of Washington.

Need Friendship of U. S.

"You may be assured that the citizens of the Northwest consider themselves greatly honored by the visit of the representatives of the press from our sister republic," said Professor Strong. "We are well aware that the press represents the sentiment and soul of a country, since it is through this medium that its ideals are expressed and its position among nations defined. It is our hope that your visit may serve as a further bond of union between the city of Seattle and you, who are representatives of the great commonwealth to the south. We hope that it may be the beginning of a sincere, mutual acquaintance entirely divested of jealousy and doubts."

Manual Carpo, editor of La Voz de la Revolucian of Yucatan, gave his idea of what should be the relations between the United States and Mexico. "We need most, Mexico and America, a better understanding through deeper and more universal knowledge of each other," he said. "This will lead to justice being done Americans in Mexico and Mexicans in America. Mexico will solve its own way to true democracy," said the speaker. Mexico, he said, needs no doctors, but does need the friendly feeling of America.

Judge Thomas Burke declared that Americans have no other feeling than that of friendship for Mexico. He touched upon the propaganda question, urging the Mexicans to ask Americans for explanations before accepting statements that would tend to create a feeling of unfriendliness between the two nations.

The evening at the Country Club was completed when the Mexicans sang "Over There," one of the recently published patriotic songs.

The delegation left today for Portland to witness the launching of a ship on July 4.

"We leave with nothing but pleasant memories of Seattle and Seattle's people," said Walker, speaking for the party. "We know we have friends here and we hope for the time when we can entertain them in Mexico. From now on, when anyone makes statements about Americans we intend to investigate. It is probable that all derogatory remarks may have the same foundation as the assertion about 400 Mexicans in the Seattle jails."

Officers in charge of the War Savings drive in Seattle yesterday extended the time limit for making pledges to next Saturday. Pledges may be had at any Seattle bank up to and including that day.

The time was extended because of the failure of a number of precinct headquarters to remain open on War Savings Day, last Friday, due to a misunderstanding of orders.
