Disloyal Teacher Loses His Appeal

OLYMPIA, Friday, Sept. 20.—State Superintendent Josephine C. Preston's revocation of J. M. Salter's teaching certificate on charges of disloyalty is sustained by the State Board of Education after a hearing yesterday afternoon on Salter's appeal. It is understood that he will next appeal from the state board to the courts. Salter was employed as teacher in an Island County district. His wife, who is also a teacher, was tried on similar charges before the state superintendent yesterday. Those she denied and closed her protestations in tears. Mrs. Salter's case is still under consideration. It involves revocation of her certificate. If found guilty of the charges. Wear your old clothes and buy Liberty Bonds.

ORGANIZED LABOR

U. S. TO ADOPT WAR PAY POLICY

Shipyard Award Held Up at President's Request Pending Arrival at Decision.

ADOPTION of a common policy of wage fixing just to all labor forces, has been decided upon by the United States government, and pending the announcement of this policy President Woodrow Wilson himself requested the national shipbuilding labor adjustment committee to withhold its decision with regard to demands of the shipyard workers for an upward revision of their wage scale. Conferees between the various labor adjustment agencies of the government looking to the adoption of the common policy of dealing with war workers are now in progress. Upon their conclusion and in the near future, the delayed shipyard wage decision will be forthcoming. This news of deepest interest and importance to an army of more than 30,000 Seattle shipyard workers, was received this morning by Henry McBride, government examiner or arbitrator for the Puget Sound shipbuilding district, in a telegram from Evered Macy, chairman of the National Shipbuilding Labor Adjustment Board, better known to shipbuilders and shipyard workers as the Macy commission. It is the first official announcement of the Macy commission has made of the reasons for the hitherto unexplained delay of its decision on the shipyard wage question, which was fully threshed out before the commission at meetings of employees and employers held under auspices of the United States Shipping Board and the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation in Philadelphia last August. The decision had been unofficially announced as forthcoming on September 20 and most recently for October 1st.

HOME DRIVE ATTRACTS COASTWIDE ATTENTION

Oakland Paper Pays Tribute to Seattle's Energy in Meeting War-Time Problem.

That Seattle's energetic campaign for additional homes, waged by the More Homes Bureau, is attracting attention all over the Coast is proved by requests for data sent in several days ago by Portland and Tacoma, and by an article from the Sunday Tribune of Oakland, which received here, which appears under a big first page heading: "What Seattle is Doing to Build Homes."

In marked contrast with the apathy and indifference shown in Oakland to the urgent need for more houses to supply our incoming population," the article says, "is the wonderful energy and foresight shown in Seattle in meeting the same identical problem."

On Even Hands. Two years ago Seattle and Oakland were each building about the same number of homes a year. In 1916 Seattle built 1,020 and Oakland 968 houses. This year, however, Seattle is on a virtually an even basis so far as homebuilding is concerned.

In the fall of 1917 it became apparent, both in Seattle and in Oakland, that the hosts of new workers in the shipyards would necessitate the building of thousands of houses.

Seattle tackled her problem with character in the way that she has started in that city this year, or as many as seven months ago, by building in Seattle in the two years of 1916 and 1917 combined. If Seattle keeps on at the present rate to the end of the year more houses will be built in that city this year than in the last three years combined.

Oakland has not only not tackled her problem with vigor, but has not even started at all. In 1917, 1,341 houses were started in Oakland, or a trifle more than Seattle is building each month.

But Seattle is not content with her splendid record. She has started a "rush" program for the building of "Homes a Month." An organization has been formed, composed of the biggest business and professional men in the city. The Seattle Chamber of Commerce has taken the lead in this matter and the More Homes Bureau is the More Homes Bureau of that body.

"Seattle is doing the right and patriotic thing."
