RESEARCH INTERESTS:

- Developing, testing and disseminating culturally relevant evidenced-based treatments for perinatal depression in low-income White and minority women. Developing, testing and disseminating brief a health services model of depression care in a public health setting to ameliorate depression in pregnant, low-income women and to prevent depressive relapse during the postpartum period.

- Identifying barriers to mental health care and developing and testing engagement strategies to address these barriers. Understanding the relationship between stigma about mental illness and treatment-related behaviors and attitudes in depressed African American and White individuals. Developing an engagement strategy using principles of ethnographic interviewing and motivational interviewing to engage and retain depressed, low-income, minority women in treatment.
- Assessing the association between chronic and acute stress and psychological distress in vulnerable individuals and families. The impact of various diatheses (e.g., chronic stress, pessimism, attachment style, and communal orientation) and stressful life events, such as the birth of a first child, on psychological and marital distress. Long-term psychosocial effects of war-related stress in Vietnam veterans and their families.
- Justice and distress in close relationships across the transition to parenthood. The associations among social comparisons, distributive justice norms, perceived fairness in family work (e.g., housework and child care), and psychological and marital distress across the transition to parenthood.
- Accelerating the coping process during marital and family transitions. Implementing and evaluating marital distress prevention programs before and after stressful normative events in family life.
- Love, intimacy, and relationship quality in close relationships over the life span. Gender differences in love and social support in close relationships. The theoretical and practical importance of Friendship-based Love in maintaining intimate relationships.
