Promoting public health research, policy, practice, and education is the mission of the American Journal of Public Health. We invite contributions of original unpublished research, opinion and commentary, departments, and letters to the editor. For specific guidelines, please visit the Journal Web site.

Cover: The cover graphic illustrates the tension between complementary and alternative medicine and Western medicine, as exemplified by juxtaposing traditional acupuncture points with contemporary modes of delivery such as low-voltage electricity and lasers (see images of Health, page 1592). Our aim in this issue is to provide a forum for discussion of ways to better integrate a wide range of healing methods with modern techniques to better meet the health needs of the world's population.
