CONTENTS

EDITORIAL
Maximising the effectiveness of harm reduction programmes
Evan Wood, Patricia M. Spittal (Canada) ................................................................. 291–292

ORIGINAL PAPERS
Testing the waters: a pilot programme to enhance the opportunities of risk reduction in Needle Syringe Program clients
Karen Nairn, Nicole McDonald, Rachel Sheather-Reid (Australia) ....................... 293–295
Methods for providing the first prevalence estimates of opiate use in Western Australia
Y.H. Choi, C.M. Comiskey (UK, Ireland) ................................................................. 297–305
The relationship between drug use and crime: a puzzle inside an enigma
Mark Simpson (UK) ................................................................................................. 307–319
Heroin users as ‘folk devils’ and French public attitudes toward public health policy
Patrick Peiretti-Watel (France) ............................................................................. 321–329
Caffeine and other adulterants in seizures of street cocaine in Brazil
Naissa Prévide Bernardo, Maria Elisa Pereira Bastos Siqueira, Maria José Nunes de Paiva, Patrícia Penido Maia (Brazil) 331–334

CONFERENCE REPORT
Highlights from the 14th International Conference on the Reduction of Drug Related Harm, 6–10 April 2003, Chiang Mai, Thailand
Annette D. Verster (Italy) ....................................................................................... 335–338

Contents continued on page 347
Contents continued

RESPONSE
Explicit models make for better policy
Nicholas C. Grassly, Geoff P. Garnett (UK) ................................................................. 339–341

REVIEW ESSAY
Learning from history: a review of David Bewley-Taylor’s The United States and International Drug Control, 1909–1997
Peter Webster (France) ................................................................................................. 343–346