Table of Contents

Features

14 The Magic of Metaphor in Memories: An Adlerian-Based Method of Treating Addictions
People with substance abuse problems are more likely to have negative first memories from their childhood. The specific content of those memories can help explain present behavior and unlock clues to recovery.

18 Healing from 'Spiritual Abuse': Assisting Gay and Lesbian Clients
Spiritually based programs can be problematic for some gay and lesbian clients. Joseph Antonio of the National Association of Lesbian and Gay Addiction Professionals discusses some spirituality-based program alternatives.

22 The Professional in Recovery: Be Sensitive to Professional Culture
Colleagues accused Martha Burkett of giving addicted executives too much leeway in her approach to treatment. She came to see it as a necessary tailoring of services.

29 Helping Clients Overcome ‘Family Culture of Pain’
For many of your clients, family dysfunction has become a baseline expectation. What professionals should address before trying to help these individuals assimilate.

34 Incorporate Multiple Tools to Treat Pathological Gambling
In the second installment of a two-part series, certified gambling counselor Eric Geffen, Ph.D., plots a road map for meeting the pathological gambler’s diverse needs in treatment.