Why Gender Matters
Approaches to Guide Women's, Men's Treatment  pg. 18, 26

The Emergence of Recovery Checkups' pg. 33
Improving Treatment of Co-Occurring Trauma pg. 40
You Can Measure Outcomes Successfully pg. 44
Table of Contents

Departments

6 Letter from the Editor
Compelling television about recovery

8 Letters
Reader comment on how evidence-based the field's processes should be.

13 Commentary
Genetic research offers hope for more effective treatments.
By Carol E. Rocca, Ph.D.

14 Advocacy
Government agencies are working together to get research findings to practitioners sooner.
By Joanne S. Wilson, M.P.A.

51 Roadblocks to Recovery
In the sequel of a series of columns on "uncooperative" clients, the author describes how negative client attitudes may be making drop-out rates higher, sooner or later.
By Nabilah L. Ray, Ph.D.

54 Alternative Treatment
A practitioner of Traditional Chinese Medicine explains how her services have benefited bothpatient and staff in a Denver treatment program.

56 Book Review
We're moved to a group treatment session. The conversation is frank and real, and the heighten group-dynamics will be powerful.
By Gary Evans

18 Drug Testing
An expert in oral fluid testing explains why this drug testing method is gaining hold in corporate America.

40 CE Quiz
Earn continuing education credits; this issue's quiz is tied to the whole on page 43.

Features

26 COVID STORIES
18 For Women Only
Making the Case for Gender-Specific Treatment
The director of the women's continuum at the Corex Foundation has come to the realization that once women are ready to benefit from treatment, women-only settings tend to offer them the most potential. She discusses other critical elements to a successful women's program.

26 The Myth of Manhood: Addressing Men's Addiction and Recovery Through Relational Therapy
Wayne Cuttingham, a private-practice addiction professional, answers the question about being a man that inspires mistrust in recovery, and again that treatment cannot offer quick-fix solutions.

33 Recovery Management Checkups: A Future Function of Addiction Professionals?
Co-authors from Chestnut Health Systems offer an historical and scientific basis for a treatment philosophy based on recovery management as opposed to acute care, and cite an important study on the importance of periodic recovery checkups for clients.

40 Effective Treatment for Complex Trauma Survivors
addressing co-occurring trauma-related disorders in persons with addictions involves treating several microtraumas about trauma, says the co-founder of Advanced Recovery Center in Florida.

44 Building an Effective Outcome Study in Behavioral Health Settings
The executive director of research at Rogers Memorial Hospital in Wisconsin takes readers through the planning, implementation and analysis stages of behavioral health outcome studies.