CHILDREN’S HEALTH CARE: LIVE WEBCAST – ASK THE EXPERTS AND NATIONAL PUBLIC HEALTH WEEK KICK-OFF EVENT

"Designing Healthy Communities: Raising Healthy Kids" is the theme of this year's National Public Health Week (NPHW) which starts Monday, April 3 and is sponsored by the American Public Health Association (APHA). Community-Campus Partnerships for Health is a partner in the effort. Kaisernetwork.org will webcast two NPHW programs focusing on children’s health:

Tuesday, April 4 at 2:00 pm EST - "Ask the Experts" About Children’s Health Care - This live webcast will focus on issues such as children’s health care financing, expanding access and coverage, disparities and more. The discussion will be moderated by kaisernetwork.org Editor-in-Chief Larry Levitt. The panel of experts will take your phone calls and emails. Send questions in advance to ask@kaisernetwork.org or call 1-888-524-7378 during the live broadcast.

The panel of experts:
- Georges C. Benjamin, MD, FACP, executive director, American Public Health Association
- Christy Ferguson, president and CEO, FirstFocus
- Robin Rudowitz, MPA, principal policy analyst, Kaiser Commission on Medicaid and the Uninsured

DRAMATIC CHANGES IN U.S. AGING HIGHLIGHTED IN NEW CENSUS, NIH REPORT IMPACT OF BABY BOOMERS ANTICIPATED

The face of aging in the United States is changing dramatically -- and rapidly, according to a new U.S. Census Bureau report, commissioned by the National Institute on Aging (NIA). Today's older Americans are very different from their predecessors, living longer, having lower rates of disability, achieving higher levels of education and less often living in poverty. And the baby boomers, the first of whom celebrated their 60th birthdays in 2006, promise to redefine further what it means to grow older in America.

The report, "65+ in the United States: 2005", was prepared for NIA, a component of the National Institutes of Health (NIH) at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, to provide a picture of the health and socioeconomic status of the aging population at a critical time in the maturing of the United States. It highlights striking shifts in aging on a population scale and also describes changes at the local and even family level, examining, for example, important changes in family structure as a result of divorce.
Among the trends:

-- The United States population aged 65 and over is expected to double in size within the next 25 years. By 2030, almost 1 out of every 5 Americans - some 72 million people -- will be 65 years or older. The age group 85 and older is now the fastest growing segment of the U.S. population.

-- The health of older Americans is improving. Still, many are disabled and suffer from chronic conditions. The proportion with a disability fell significantly from 26.2 percent in 1982 to 19.7 percent in 1999. But 14 million people age 65 and older reported some level of disability in Census 2000, mostly linked to a high prevalence of chronic conditions such as heart disease or arthritis.

-- The financial circumstances of older people have improved dramatically, although there are wide variations in income and wealth. The proportion of people aged 65 and older in poverty decreased from 35 percent in 1959 to 10 percent in 2003, mostly attributed to the support of Social Security. In 2000, the poorest fifth of senior households had a net worth of $3,500 ($44,346 including home equity) and the wealthiest had $328,432 ($449,800 including home equity).

-- Geographically, Florida (17.6 percent), Pennsylvania (15.6 percent) and West Virginia (15.3 percent) are the "oldest" states, with the highest percentages of people aged 65 and older. Charlotte County, Fla. (34.7 percent) gets top honors among counties, and McIntosh County, N.D. (34.2 percent) ranks second.

-- Higher levels of education, which are linked to better health, higher income, more wealth and a higher standard of living in retirement, will continue to increase among people 65 and older. The proportion of Americans with at least a bachelor's degree grew five-fold from 1950 to 2003, from 3.4 percent to 17.4 percent, and by 2030, more than one-fourth of the older population is expected to have an undergraduate degree. The percentage completing high school quadrupled between 1950 and 2003, from 17.0 percent to 71.5 percent.

-- As the United States as a whole grows more diverse, so does the population aged 65 and older. In 2003, older Americans were 83 percent non-Hispanic White, 8 percent Black, 6 percent Hispanic and 3 percent Asian. By 2030, an estimated 72 percent of older Americans will be non-Hispanic White, 11 percent Hispanic, 10 percent Black and 5 percent Asian.

-- Changes in the American family have significant implications for future aging. Divorce, for example, is on the rise, and some researchers suggest that fewer children and more stepchildren may change the availability of family support in the future for people at older ages. In 1960, only 1.6 percent of older men and 1.5 percent of women aged 65 and older were divorced. But by 2003, 7 percent of older men and 8.6 percent of older women were divorced and had not remarried. The trend may be continuing. In 2003, among people in their early 60s, 12.2 percent of men and 15.9 percent of women were divorced.

The report was prepared by Dr. Velkoff and co-authors Wan He, Ph.D., Manisha Sengupta, Ph.D., and Kimberly A. DeBarros of the Population Division, U.S. Census Bureau.

The 243-page compendium examines in detail five key areas: growth of the older population (changes in age and racial/ethnic composition), longevity and health (life expectancy and causes of death), economic characteristics (income and household wealth), geographic distribution (by population and race) and social and other characteristics (marital status, living arrangements and voting patterns).

Last month, we had the opportunity to participate in the 4th Annual Western Regional International Health Conference, “Health, Human Rights and Economics: The Value of Human Life,” in Portland, Oregon, hosted by Global Health Alliance (GHA), an Oregon Health & Science University (OHSU) student group. GHA aims to reduce international health disparities through the promotion of global health awareness, education and advocacy at OHSU. They facilitate opportunities for students to visit other countries to learn about health care in diverse cultures and settings, and use their global health awareness to serve the health care needs of their local community. Through their activities, they hope to increase OHSU collaboration with the global health community in order to promote health equity for all people worldwide.

In this article, we report on several of the sessions we attended and what we learned from them. By sharing this information, we hope to connect you to helpful resources and to inspire you to consider the connection of your work to broader international health and human rights issues.

A session on “Beyond Cultural Competence to Cultural Humility,” was led by Isabelle Soulé, Assistant Professor of Nursing at OHSU and a former CCPH Service-Learning Institute participant. Her theory is that competence is an inadequate description for the way that health care providers should address cultural differences. She states that “the underpinnings of cultural competence are based on a model of active volition, moving forward, and gaining skill, mastery, and competence.” Ms. Soulé counters that cultural humility is a more appropriate term because it “is based on a model of passive volition, receptivity, and being open to learn from others.” She believes that it is not possible to be “culturally competent” because differences in culture are individually-based and that a person can be a part of many different cultures. She states that “cultural humility challenges us to develop intellectual, attitudinal and behavioral flexibility.”

Another session focused on the Northern Ontario School of Medicine (NOSM), which is a new medical school - the first in Canada and the second in North America to be established in the last 34 years. Daniel Hunt, the dean, described how the school’s unique curriculum focuses on underserved populations of rural and Aboriginal people of Canada. They use an online case based curriculum that brings together the local cultural issues with the medical and clinical sciences. As a requirement of the program, students spend a significant amount of time in rural and remote locations working with a local health official. The hope of NOSM is that students who attend the school will become practicing physicians in Northern Ontario at the conclusion of their education and training. For more information about NOSM, visit http://www.normed.ca/.

A session on “Effects of HIV/AIDS on Women and Children in Developing Countries,” included speakers from MercyCorps, the Portland Area Global AIDS Coalition, and the University of California, San Francisco Medical School. The speakers focused on the HIV epidemic and its impact on women and children in Kenya, Botswana, and Uganda, where more than half of those living with HIV are women. The panel discussed some of the biological, social and cultural reasons that women are disproportionately affected by the AIDS epidemic in developing countries. Prevention of mother-to-child transmission, the difficulties of the “abstinence” and “be faithful” messages for women who have contracted the disease through their husbands, and the growing orphan population were all discussed by the panel. Because all three of the panel members had worked in Africa, they were able to give firsthand accounts of the impact of HIV on women and children in Sub-Saharan Africa today.

A session on “Economic Globalization and Health Development” featured Dr. Chunhuei Chi, the Director of the International Health Program at the Oregon Masters in Public Health Program. Dr. Chi presented the results of two studies he has done looking at the impact of globalization and global economic policies on middle to low-income countries. His research supports what many global health professionals have been discussing for many years; that countries that went through a structural adjustment program had higher infant mortality rates and lower life expectancies than those who that did not. He also discussed some new research that he wants to start looking at the impact of the World Trade Organization on health outcomes in middle and low-income countries.

The next Western Regional International Health Conference will take place at the University of Washington in Seattle in 2007. For more information, visit http://www.ohsu.edu/som/gha/index.html.

CCPH Conference Keynote Speaker Addresses Health Disparities in Infant Mortality & Diabetes on Public Radio

In early March, Loretta Jones, CCPH 9th Conference Opening Keynote Speaker and Executive Director of Healthy African American Families II, Inc., participated as a panelist in two live radio broadcasts to discuss health disparities, particularly in the areas of infant mortality and diabetes. She was invited by 89.3 KPCC public radio at Pasadena City College as part of the station’s “Health Gap” week. The first discussion, “Talk of the City – Fighting Black Infant Mortality” aired on March 7, followed by “Talk of the City – The Diabetes Crisis in the Latino and African-American Communities” on March 9. ANNOUNCEMENTS

Seeking Good Practices – Health & Housing – The Department of General Practice of Primary Health Care at Ghent University in Belgium is making a policy study on the relation between health and housing. They are seeking information on how information on the housing condition of individual patients can be gathered (e.g. health and welfare workers visiting the patient at home can take an important role in reporting housing problems). They are asking for “good practices” abroad in which problems in the living conditions are efficiently and adequately report by health or other professional workers. They are also looking for good practices in which taking care of health and housing quality go hand in hand. If you would like to refer them to researchers, policymakers, fieldworkers or others working on this topic in your country, please contact Tomas Mainil at tomas.mainil@ugent.be.

Catalog of Professional Development Programs for Medical School Faculty Being Developed - Does your medical school offer professional development programs for faculty? Would you like others to know of the great work you are doing in mentoring, new faculty orientation, career development for junior faculty, leadership programs for Chairs, skill-building workshops for researchers and educators? You are invited to highlight your offerings in a national catalog being compiled by the Association of American Medical Colleges’ section on Faculty Development and Leadership. For more information, visit http://www.aamc.org/members/facultydev

Quantitative Methods in Cancer Surveillance – The Surveillance Research Program of the National Cancer Institute is coordinating this course at the Summer Institute of Epidemiology and Biostatistics offered by the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health. This is a 5-day course that will be held June 26-30, 2006 in Baltimore, Maryland. This course is intended to provide skills for understanding and implementing statistical methods used with cancer registry and related data. For more information, visit http://srab.cancer.gov/hopkins.html

Intern with Context Journal – Deadline: April 13 - Context Journal seeks one paid intern to assist in developing a national database of health projects initiated by students working in communities. This internship is ideal for students interested in community engagement among health professionals. An ideal candidate may be pursuing a career in the non-profit sector or health professions including medicine, nursing, public health or law. This internship is based in Atlanta, Georgia. Context Journals’ editor-in-chief, Carmen Patrick, is also a CCPH board member. For more information, visit http://www.contextjournal.org

Building Partnerships for Youth – This Collaboration Tool is a customizable PowerPoint tool to help bring people together about issues that are important for the health, education and well-being of young people. It consists of a PowerPoint presentation and instruction manual detailing the steps necessary to customize it for use in your state or community. The presentation provides practical examples for how community, family and school can be strengthened through non-school-hour youth development programs. Included in the presentation are questions designed to initiate discussion among state and community groups. For more information, visit http://ag.arizona.edu/fcs/bpy/

Free Resource: Why Bad Presentations Happen to Good Causes – Based on unprecedented research across the public interest sector, and incorporating the advice of 20 highly regarded public speaking experts, “Why Bad Presentations Happen to Good Causes” can help nonprofits design and deliver presentations that avoid common pitfalls. Andy Goodman’s accessible guide will help you engage, inspire, and motivate the audiences you need to reach. To order a free copy, visit http://www.causecommunications.org/CC/CC_news06_1.html

Staying Alive: Critical Perspectives on Health, Illness, and Health Care

Edited by Dennis Raphael, Toba Bryant and Marcia Rioux

This provocative new book will change the way that the Sociology of Health and Illness is taught in Sociology departments across Canada. Those teaching in Health Studies, Nursing, and Policy Studies programs will also be keenly interested in this ground-breaking book. Staying Alive provides a fresh perspective on health, health care, and illness by emphasizing the role public policy plays in influencing these issues and how such policy is shaped by political, economic, and social forces.
