The University of Washington

Environmental Health
Undergraduate Program

The Jack Hatlen Scholarship Fund

The UW Environmental Health program is pleased to announce a new scholarship for Environmental Health undergraduates! The Jack Hatlen Scholarship offers $1,000 to one outstanding undergraduate entering the Environmental Health major each academic year. The first scholarship will be awarded autumn quarter 2006.

Students who apply for the scholarship will be considered based on a variety of criteria including: cumulative GPA, achievement in science prerequisites (http://depts.washington.edu/ehug/pstu_requirements.html), intended career goals, and an understanding of the environmental health field.

Help us train tomorrow’s environmental health professionals today! Jack Hatlen graduated with UW’s first Environmental Health undergraduate class in 1949. He was appointed department lecturer in 1951 and program coordinator in 1958. Jack Hatlen led the undergraduate program for nearly 40 years until his semi-retirement in 1995. Jack continues to work with the Department of Environmental and Occupational Health Sciences as emeritus faculty.

For application information or to make a donation, please contact:

James Meadows
Environmental Health Program Manager
(206)616-4177
jamescm@u.washington.edu