As the U.W. faculty consider unionization as a strategy to protect higher education in Washington State, as well as a means to improving our working conditions and the status of faculty, we turn our gaze to Rutgers. This highly-regarded public university in New Jersey, roughly the size of the UW, has been unionized since the 1970s. What can we learn from our counterparts at Rutgers?

Dr. Ann Gould is chair of the Rutgers University Senate, which represents a wide variety of constituents on the Rutgers campus. She is a professor of plant biology.

Dr. Karen R. Stubaus is VP for Academic Affairs and Administration at Rutgers. She is responsible for faculty and academic labor relations, and a myriad of other things. She holds a PhD in 17th-century American history.

Dr. David Hughes is president of the AAUP/AFT faculty union at Rutgers University, where he is a professor of anthropology. His most recent book is Whiteness in Zimbabwe; a forthcoming book is Energy without Conscience.
As the U.W. faculty consider unionization as a strategy to protect higher education in Washington State, as well as a means to improving our working conditions and the status of faculty, we turn our gaze to Rutgers. This highly-regarded public university in New Jersey, roughly the size of the UW, has been unionized since the 1970s. What can we learn from our counterparts at Rutgers?

How’s it going at Rutgers?

Dr. Ann Gould is chair of the Rutgers University Senate, which represents a wide variety of constituents on the Rutgers campus. She is a professor of plant biology.

Dr. Karen R. Stubaus is VP for Academic Affairs and Administration at Rutgers. She is responsible for faculty and academic labor relations, and a myriad of other things. She holds a PhD in 17th-century American history.

Dr. David Hughes is president of the AAUP/AFT faculty union at Rutgers University, where he is a professor of anthropology. His most recent book is Whiteness in Zimbabwe; a forthcoming book is Energy without Conscience.

This annual meeting of the UW Chapter of the American Association of University Professors is open to the public.