
In the Interest of Others

In the Interest of Others

ORGANIZATIONS AND SOCIAL ACTIVISM

John S. Ahlquist and Margaret Levi

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS

Princeton & Oxford

Copyright © 2013 by Princeton University Press
Published by Princeton University Press, 41 William Street,
Princeton, New Jersey 08540
In the United Kingdom: Princeton University Press, 6 Oxford Street,
Woodstock, Oxfordshire OX20 1TW

press.princeton.edu

Cover illustration: Anton Refregier (1905–79), *San Francisco '34
Waterfront Strike* c. 1940–48. Courtesy of the Library of Congress, Prints &
Photographs Division, LC-USZC4-6564, and the family of Anton Refregier

All Rights Reserved

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS CATALOGING-IN-PUBLICATION DATA

Ahlquist, John S.

In the interest of others : organizations and social activism / John S. Ahlquist and Margaret Levi.

pages cm

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-0-691-15856-3 (hardback : alk. paper) — ISBN 978-0-691-15857-0
(pbk. : alk. paper) 1. Labor unions—Political activity. I. Levi, Margaret. II. Title.

HD8031.A45 2013

322'.2—dc23 2013009155

British Library Cataloging-in-Publication Data is available

This book has been composed in Sabon LT

Printed on acid-free paper ∞

Printed in the United States of America

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

For David J. Olson
Comrade, Colleague, and Friend

Contents

List of Figures	ix
List of Tables	xi
Acknowledgments	xiii
Chapter 1: Beyond Economism	1
Our Argument	5
The Cases	10
Alternative Accounts	15
The Chapters	18
Chapter 2: Building an Encompassing Community of Fate and Winning Consent	22
Leaders, Governance, and Organizational Performance	25
Modeling Organizational Scope and Governance	28
From Leadership Rents to Organizational Governance Institutions	38
Summary and Conclusions	43
Appendix	45
Chapter 3: Pork, Perks, and Predation	53
International Brotherhood of Teamsters (IBT)	55
The ILA	71
Discussion	77
Chapter 4: An Injury to Anyone Is an Injury to All	79
Commonalities Between the ILWU and WWF	80
ILWU	84
WWF	103
Tension between Political and Industrial Commitments	113
Continuity Over Time	114
Conclusion	118
Chapter 5: Managing Heterogeneity	120
Managing the Heterogeneity of Locals	121
Managing Individual Heterogeneity	135
Conclusion	152
Chapter 6: Provoking Preferences	155
The Literature	157
Preference Provocation	162

Evidence of Preference Provocation	168
Evidence of Contingent Consent	181
Conclusions	183
Chapter 7: Political Attitudes and Behavior among ILWU Members with Amanda B. Clayton	185
Employment, Compensation, and Shipping Volumes on the U.S. West Coast	187
International Trade and Public Opinion	189
The ILWU's Organizational Principles and International Trade	192
ILWU Members' and Affiliates' Attitudes Toward Trade	199
ILWU Affiliates' Political Behavior	212
Robustness Considerations	216
Conclusion	219
Appendices	220
Chapter 8: Signaling Solidarity?	230
Bargaining, Strikes, and Politics	233
The ILWU	238
The WWF	251
Conclusion	256
Appendix	259
Chapter 9: Conclusions and Implications	261
Union Behavior	262
Other Membership Organizations	265
Firms	268
The State	269
Other Implications	272
Communities of Fate	276
Bibliography	279
Index	303

Figures

1.1: The founding argument in schematic form	7
1.2: The dynamic argument in schematic form	8
4.1: ILWU member turnout in union elections	93
5.1: Seattle ILWU residential density 1940	143
5.2: Seattle ILWU residential density 2006	144
5.3: Tacoma ILWU residential density 1940	145
5.4: Tacoma ILWU residential density 2006	146
5.5: ILWU Long Beach/San Pedro residential density 2006	147
5.6: WWF Melbourne residential density 1945	148
5.7: WWF Melbourne residential density 2009	149
5.8: WWF Sydney residential density 1945	150
5.9: WWF Sydney residential density 2009	151
5.10: Long Beach IBT residential density 2009	153
5.11: Seattle IBT residential density 2009	154
7.1: Shipping volumes, longshore employment, and longshore earnings for the U.S. West Coast have all increased substantially in recent decades, along with overall U.S. trade	188
7.2: Distribution of responses to whether the U.S. government should place new limits on imports	202
7.3: Predicted probabilities for all respondents in the matched dataset, by ILWU affiliation status	205
7.4: Predicted probabilities for all ILWU respondents, by seniority status	206
7.5: Comparing trade attitudes among union members by union tenure, matching on age	207
7.6: Distribution of respondents' level of confidence in NAFTA for RDD, ILWU, and 2006 World Values Survey	209

7.7: Difference in the predicted probability of having no confidence in NAFTA, comparing Class-A/RDD and Class-A/Casual, holding other covariates at central tendencies	211
7.8: Distribution of self-reported protest behavior in the last 12 months	213
7.9: Distribution of self-reported political contributions	215
7.10: Distribution of self-reported voting behavior	217
7.11: Standardized bias, pre- and post-matching	221
7.12: Distribution of propensity scores	222
7.13: Visualizing matched and unmatched units by propensity score	223
8.1: The negotiating calendar has little bearing on political strikes prior to the 1971–72 strike, but in later years the two are closely related	246
8.2: Model performance across different possible shocks to the union reputation. The immediate aftermath of the 1971 strike is clearly visible	248
8.3: The distribution of man-hours lost to political strikes on the Australian docks, on the log scale (with a small constant added)	253

Tables

1.1: The cases organized by industrial success and political mobilization	11
2.1: Summary of empirical hypotheses	46
4.1: Ten guiding principles of the ILWU	90
7.1: Multinomial logistic regression results on attitudes toward trade barriers using imputed and matched data	203
7.2: Ordered probit regression results on confidence in NAFTA using matched and imputed data (higher values imply less confidence)	210
7.3: Logistic regression on self-reported participation in political demonstrations, imputed and matched data	214
7.4: Logistic regression on self-reported political contributions, imputed and matched data	216
7.5: Logistic regression on self-reported voter turnout, imputed and matched data	218
7.6: Resampling ILWU respondents by local and rank	227
8.1: Hypotheses	237
8.2: ILA and ILWU compared	239
8.3: Logit models of political strikes	244
8.4: Hurdle negative binomial model for work-hours lost to political strikes	255
8.5: Hurdle negative binomial model of work-hours lost to industrial strikes	257

Acknowledgments

Dedication of this book to David Olson hardly captures our debt to him. As the first Harry Bridges Chair in Labor Studies, he began an enduring relationship with the International Longshore and Warehouse Union (ILWU) that piqued our interest in this remarkable union and led to extraordinary access to people, archives, and information. David co-directed “Union Democracy Reexamined” with Margaret and approved John’s appointment to help manage the project in the summer before John officially became a graduate student at the University of Washington. He was a collaborator and co-author with Margaret for nearly forty years and a mentor and friend to both of us. He read and commented constructively on everything either of us wrote that dealt with labor or unions or workers. He advised us, prodded us, and praised us. He marched with us and drank with us. He was there for our celebratory moments and for those times when we needed a lift. He opened doors others could not. One of his last acts of friendship was his reading of the final manuscript, which bears his thoughts and influence—and corrections.

The ILWU is an organization where work is done in teams. We took their lesson to heart and benefited from the contributions of a very large team of graduate and undergraduate students who searched archives, undertook interviews, engaged in surveys, and wrote memos and papers that we draw upon extensively. Jon Agnone was the primary research assistant for more than four years. It was he who negotiated the contribution of the invaluable interview tapes from Howard Kimeldorf and William Finlay, two distinguished authors of earlier books on longshore work, and it was Jon who ensured the tapes were transcribed and coded for use not only by us but for future generations of scholars as well. He helped frame the survey and supervised it until, upon receiving his PhD in Sociology, he passed the torch on to Amanda Clayton. It was Amanda’s initiative and persistence that finally earned us the cooperation of all the locals we wished to include in the survey. Equally important, she decided to write her master’s thesis on the changing residential patterns of three unions and the consequences for occupational community. Her maps and thinking gave us new insights into the various forms of social networks that develop (or fail to develop) as a consequence of membership. Other graduate students also played key roles in supervising undergraduates and providing research of their own: Barry Eidlin, on loan from Berkeley, researched the Minneapolis Teamsters; Devin Kelley wrote up the responses of different longshore unions to containerization; Rebecca Szper helped with the electoral data collection and analysis; Juliana Rigg and Alison Waggener Boyd ran focus groups; Antonina Gentile shared her knowledge of European waterfront unions; and John Hermanson supervised group interviews with pensioners. Anne Greenleaf and Jennifer Noveck provided additional assistance with the polishing of the final manuscript.

The undergraduates (many now long graduated) constitute an even longer list. Nowell Bamberger, Chris Croker, Byron Haworth, Morgen Myrdahl, George Robertson, Carrie Sachse, and Elizabeth Zamora wrote papers from which we draw heavily. Others engaged in essential coding, transcribing, survey analysis, and bibliographic work: Alex Aldea, Hester Angus, Angeli Bhatt, Kristin Ebeling, Randy Eng, Elizabeth Fawthrop, Max Frieda, Adam Goodwin, Jun Hwang, Tyler Jones, Ashleigh King, Brendan McDavid, Natalie Quist, Cheryl Ream, Michael Rodriguez, Armontae Smith, Igor Voloshin, and Lila Zucker.

We could not have built such a team without the funding of the National Science Foundation through SES-0717454, SES-0517735, and an REU (Research Experience for Undergraduates) grant. Additional funding came from the United States Studies Centre at the University of Sydney and from the Harry Bridges Center for Labor Studies for working groups on Union Democracy Revisited (with David Olson) and Waterfront Workers' History (with James Gregory) and, through the Center, a Washington State Labor Research Grant. Levi received a seed grant for a preliminary and related project from the Russell Sage Foundation. Politics & Society provided funding for an early conference and Florida State University for a later one. The Jere L. Bacharach Professorship supported some travel and other expenses, as did both Florida State University and the University of Wisconsin. The Helen Riaboff Whiteley Center at Friday Harbor provided additional research time and space and a lovely atmosphere in which to cogitate, collaborate, and write. We also relied heavily on the staff and resources of the Noel Butlin Archives Centre of Australian National University, the International Longshore and Warehouse Union archives, the Cal State Northridge special collections, the archives of the Harry Bridges Institute, and the special collections of the University of Washington.

Numerous colleagues shared their time and expertise. We benefited immensely from their feedback, questions, and tough love. Michael McGinnis and the late Elinor Ostrom sponsored a "book party" at the Workshop for Political Theory and Policy Analysis, Indiana University, to discuss our penultimate draft. Their comments proved invaluable, as did those of the discussants, especially Torben Iversen and Elisabeth Wood, who read the entire manuscript and continued to engage with us after the workshop ended. Christopher Adolph, Ron Magden, David Olson, Shane White, Eugene Vrana, Joe Wenzel, and, of course, the reviewers, Mark Lichbach, Gary Miller, Ignacio (Pacho) Sanchez-Cuenca, and Kathleen Thelen, commented on the final draft. Indeed, we owe a special thanks to Pacho, who advised us at the outset and was there to give us feedback at the end. Others who provided useful comments on particular chapters and arguments were Matt Baggetta, Matt Baretto, Tim Bartley, Dan Cole, Cliff Carrubra, Kathy Cramer-Walsh, Torun Dewan, Eric Dickson, Scott Gehlbach, Avner Greif, Jeff Hart, Macartan Humphreys, Edgar Kiser, Edmund Malesky, Greg Mallory, Steve Pfaff, David Soskice, and Erik Olin Wright. Lew Bateman and Chuck Myers, two of the best editors in the business, also offered good advice and support.

Equally important to the development of our argument were the responses of audiences where one or both of us presented papers drawn from the book. University and institute venues included Bergen, Berkeley, CEACS (Center for Advanced Study in the Social Sciences) of the Juan March in Madrid, Columbia, Colorado, Dartmouth, Florida State, Gothenburg, Harvard, Kobe, Mahanirban Calcutta Research Group, Max Planck Institute in Cologne, MIT, Oxford, Penn State, Stanford, Sydney, Texas, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin (Havens Center, La Follette School), Yale, UCLA, and the World Bank Institute. Meetings included those of the American Political Science Association (2010 and 2011), Brisbane Labour History Association, International Political Economy Society (2011), International Society of the New Institutional Economics (2012), International Studies Association (2012), Midwest Political Science Association (2012), and Southern Political Science Association (2011).

Without the help of members, officers, and others connected to the Maritime Union of Australia and of the International Longshore and Warehouse Union, this book could not be. They inspired us, but they also provided us with access and practical support. At the MUA, we benefited from the assistance of Paddy Crumlin, Paul McAleer, Warren Smith, and Zoe Reynolds. At the ILWU, we owe special thanks to those who helped convince the International and local leadership of the value of the survey. We would not have had access without the active commitments of Holly Hulscher, Bobby Olvera Jr., Conrad Spell, Herald Ugles, and Joe Wenzl. We also recognize the invaluable assistance of David Arian, Sarah Faker, Jodi Itman, Scott Mason, Danajo Montez, Chris Romischer, Paul Pemberton, Peter Peyton, Joan Rettinger, Tony Salcido, Randy Vekich, Matt Ventoza, Robin Walker, and Cameron Williams. Also deserving of our gratitude are Bob Hasegawa, Teamsters, Andrew Hedden, Harry Bridges

Center for Labor Studies, Conor M. Casey, Labor Archives of Washington, University of Washington Libraries, and Goetz Wolf, Harry Bridges Institute. We owe a special debt of gratitude to Geoffrey Garrett and Sean Gallagher and the staff of the U.S. Studies Centre, who created a home base in Australia for us. Ron Magden literally opened his basement, full of decades of interviews, films, documents, and notes, most of which are now housed at the University of Washington, and he gave freely of his vast knowledge and experience. Gene Vrana, formerly director of Education and archivist/librarian of the ILWU, made materials available throughout and corrected our errors, both in terms of history and protocol. Any faults rest on us, despite Gene's and Ron's best efforts to eliminate them.

This project has been more than a decade in the making, spanning John's entire graduate school career and then some. He would like to extend personal thanks and recognition to his parents, Deborah and Stephen, his siblings, Andrew, Elisabeth, and Joel, as well as Andrew Lewis. He could not have completed this project without the love and support of a large and widely dispersed group of friends who are thankfully too numerous to mention by name. Special thanks, however, are directed to those whose hospitality he has abused over the years: James Henrickson and Jennifer Zee-Henrickson; Jason Tsai and Charlotte Rhode; Maia Piccagali and Scott Steiger; and Peter Dilello.

Margaret thanks her great friends, Bea Kelleigh, Katrina Pflaumer, Jennifer Isaacs, and Marah Brah, who continually demonstrated interest in a project so different from the important contributions they make daily. Both of us are in debt to Pat Troy and Sandy MacKenzie and to Lindie Clark and Kerry Schott for intellectual and caloric sustenance plus, when needed, shelter in Australia. Margaret's family, Beatrice Levi, Alice Duncan, Jane Kaplan and Don Bonato, Nick Duncan, and Caroline Duncan, remain a continuous and never-ending source of support.

Finally, we both thank Bob Kaplan who survived—gracefully—another book project of Margaret's and a first one of John's, adopted as part of the family. Bob ensured, as best he could, that writing and collaboration were made even more pleasurable by providing us with good food and great wine at the end of long days at the academic mill.