Dear Senior Project Coordinator,

My name is [REDACTED]. I am currently a senior at [REDACTED] High School. I was born in the Cagayan, Philippines on August 3, 1989 but was then brought here in the United States at the age of seven. I grew up without any parental guidance, but I was lucky to have a sister that has been caring for and supporting me through everything. Ever since I can remember I have been passionate about helping others, especially to people who are low-income and minority. As the years passed by, I began to fall in love with the medical field, especially involving the care of children. I soon started being involved in programs to help me pursue my career in life, such as MESA, Upward Bound, Team Read, and UDOC. These programs broadened my choices for my future.

Therefore for my senior project, I wanted to research a topic related to my career choice. The topic I choose was Human Papillomavirus also known as HPV. Human Papillomavirus is a genital HPV infection that is sexually transmitted and can infect both women and in men. My essential question is what is HPV, how does it affect, and how do you prevent and treat it? At this point, I have only found these two sources from the internet: <http://www.cdc.gov/std/HPV/STDFact-HPV.htm>, and http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Human_papillomavirus.

For my physical project I would like to create a brochure that would be accessible to my fellow peers through placement in the nurses office. I would also like to volunteer in a clinic to explain what HPV is and hopefully help spread the word for teens.

I define plagiarism as unauthorized use or close imitation of the work and thoughts of someone else's work. I will never plagiarize anyone's work because it would cause me consequences that I could not risk to damage my future. To prevent myself from plagiarizing, I would quote the texts I used and site my sources and create a bibliography of all my sources using the MLA format.

Yours Truly,

[REDACTED]
