ABA for SLPs

Speech-language pathologists (SLPs) implement their clinical practice by writing goals, targeting a variety of clinical behaviors, and measuring progress. There is much overlap in theory and practice between SLPs and BCBAs (board certified behavior analysts), but the similarities are not always clear across professions. The UW Autism Center is excited to present a workshop for SLPs, students, or others interested in learning how these two approaches compliment each other.

In this workshop, participants will learn:
• About ABCs of ABA (applied behavior analysis), reinforcement, and shaping behavior
• About systematic goal-writing targeting communication needs for children of all ages and ability levels, incorporating behavioral approaches
• To identify common ground between ABA and SLP including augmentative and alternative communication, environmental supports, and incidental teaching
