

An illustration of two hands, one from the left and one from the right, holding a blue ribbon. The ribbon is intertwined with several orange and purple lines that curve across the background. The hands are rendered in a simple, line-art style with a light skin tone.

Sean Elmquist

Assistant Director of Training & Technical Assistance

The logo for 'MEN AS PEACE MAKERS' is enclosed in a teal rectangular border. It features the words 'MEN AS' in a large, bold, blue sans-serif font. Below 'MEN' is a teal silhouette of a dove with its wings spread, holding a small green olive branch. To the right of the dove, the words 'PEACE' and 'MAKERS' are stacked vertically in the same large, bold, blue sans-serif font.

MEN AS PEACE MAKERS

Innovation
Prevention
Connectedness
Restorative

weaving

Intact
Communities

Men As Peacemakers

Innovation
Prevention
Connectedness
Restorative

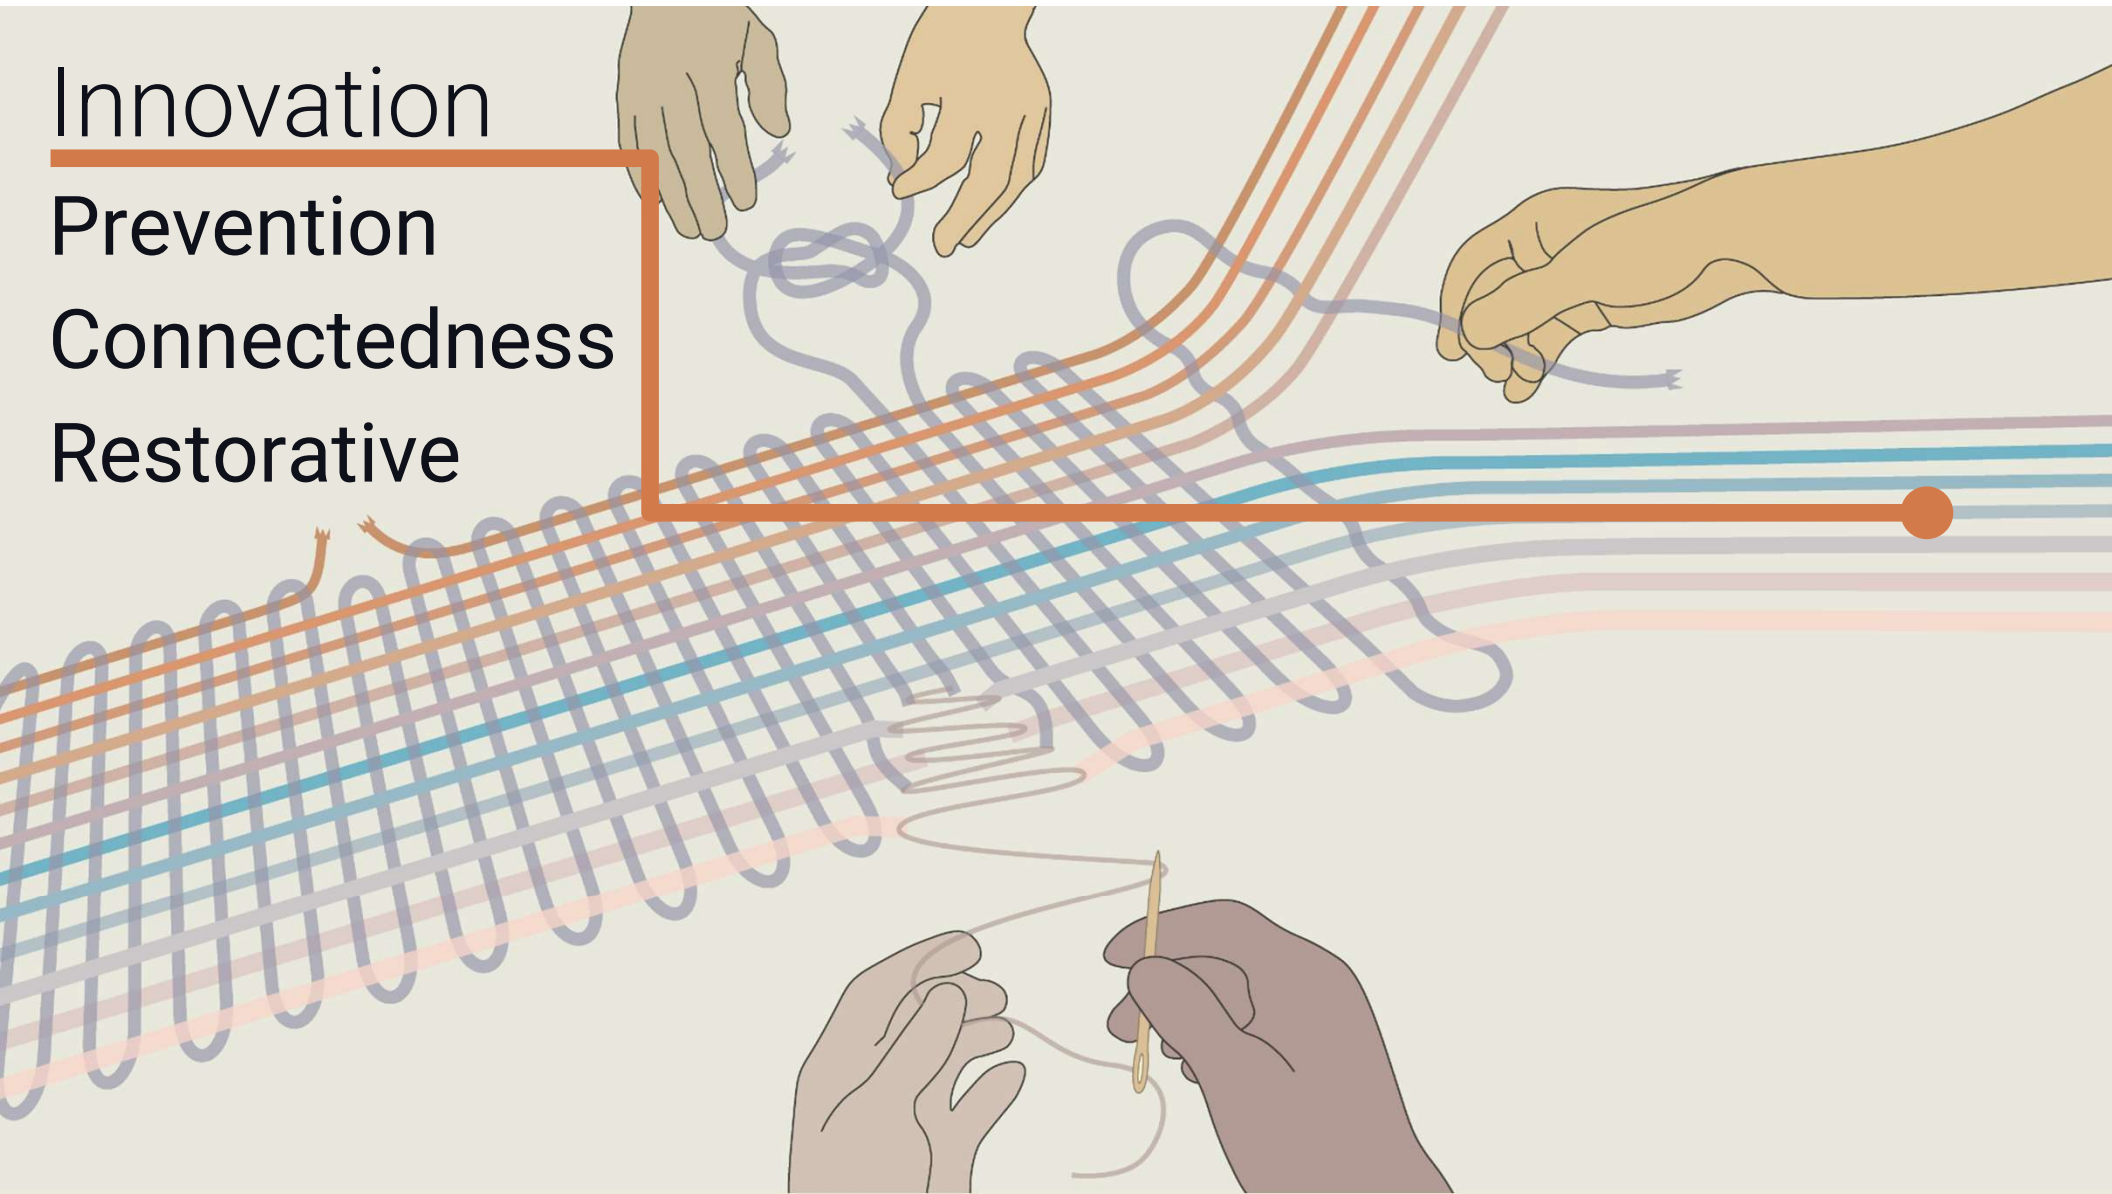

Innovation

Prevention

Connectedness

Restorative

Innovation

New Pathways to Community
Healing

Community Mapping

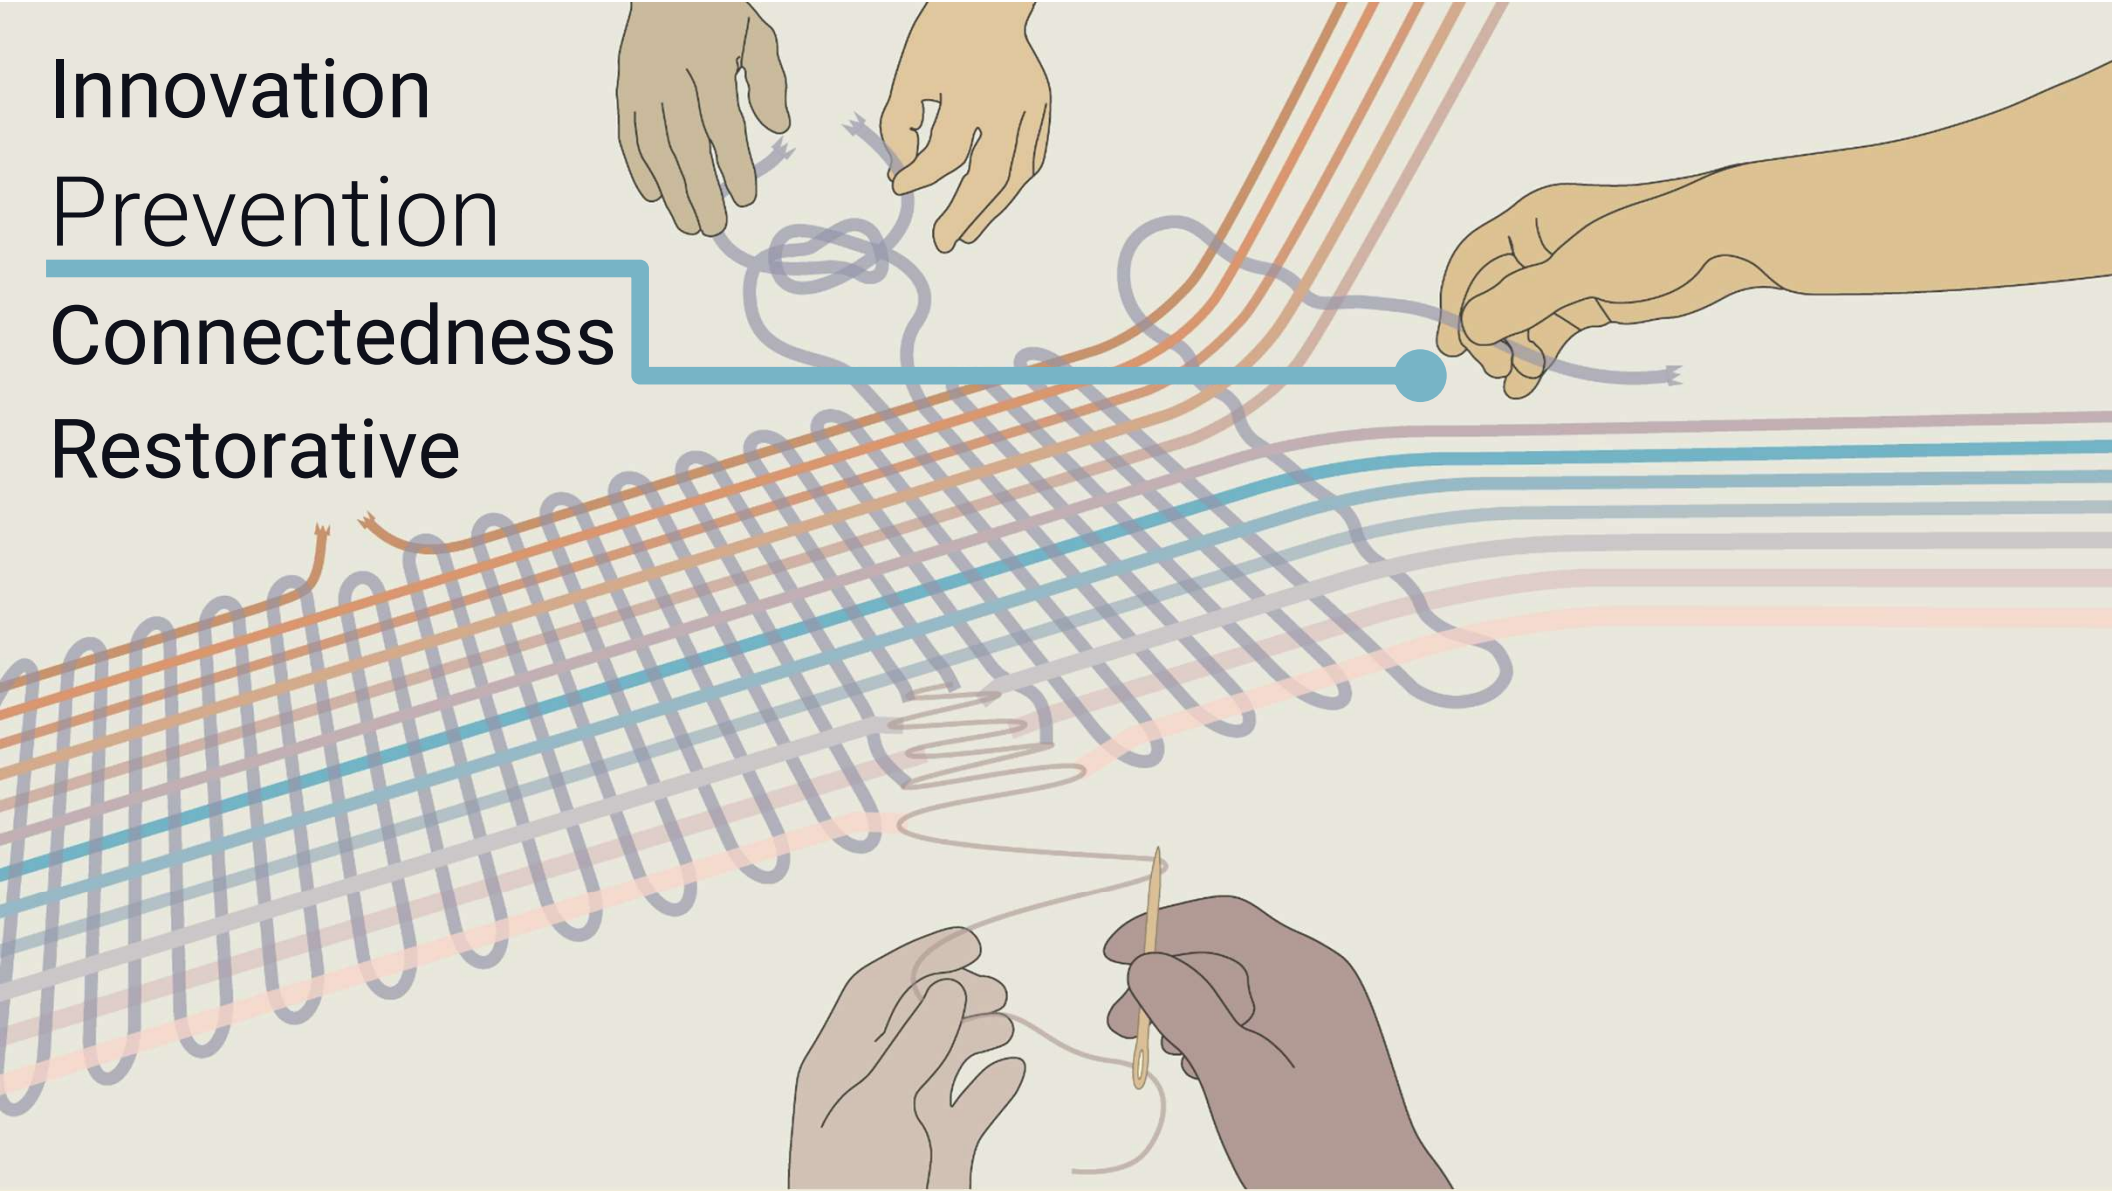

The most effective solutions are not a checklist or curriculum, but rather, a process of engaging the elements of community that are intact, weaving together individual, organizational, and collective gifts and strengths, embedding community wisdom and healing traditions into best practices in prevention, advocacy, and restorative justice, centering those most impacted by violence, and together, building a holistic community of healing.

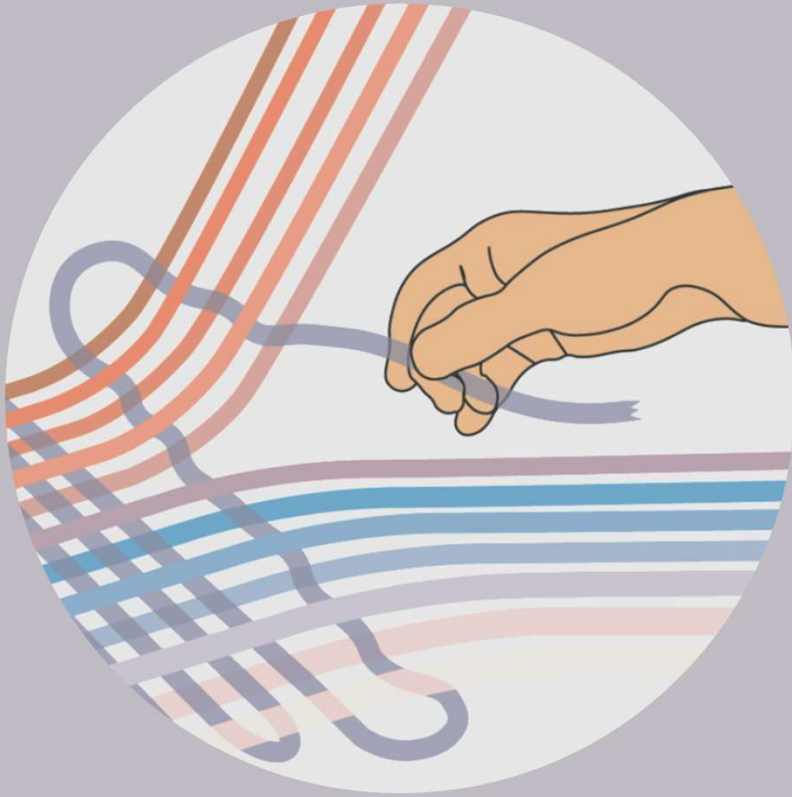

Innovation

Innovation
Prevention
Connectedness
Restorative

Prevention

Weaving Resilience

Future Casting to Prevent Violence

Preventing violence requires navigating the present with both practical intentionality and a hopeful vision for the future. Weaving in response to the present moment, MAP works with communities to incorporate innovations derived from experience. A new pattern begins to emerge over time, creating the conditions for a safer, more resilient, and more tightly woven community.

Prevention

Innovation
Prevention
Connectedness
Restorative

Connectedness

Stronger Communities Through Interconnection

Practicing Interdependence

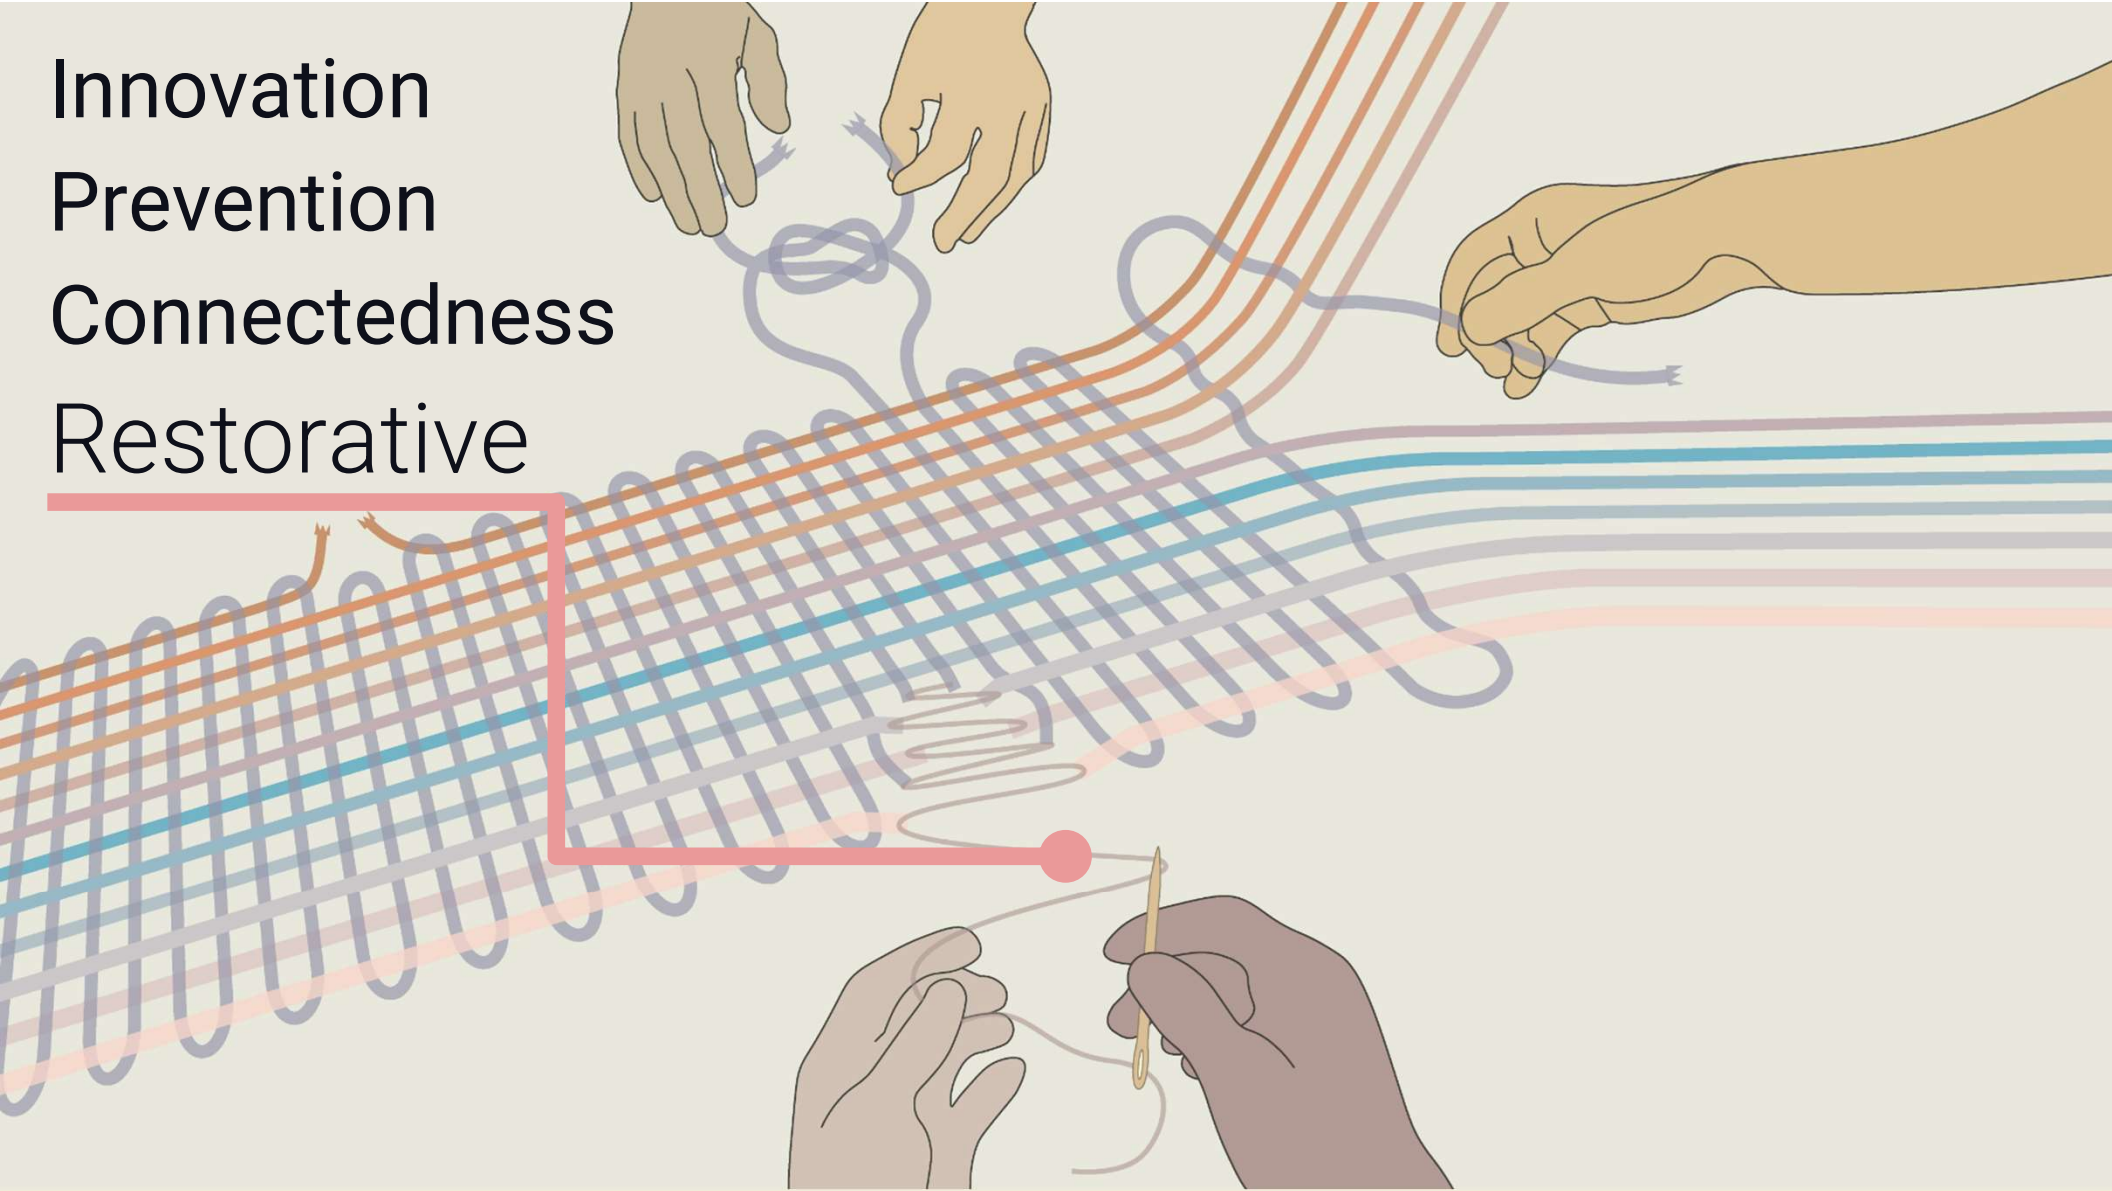

Connected communities are stronger communities. Connected communities are safer communities. Connectedness is a protective factor against a spectrum of harm and violence - in connected communities, members are less likely to perpetrate or experience violence. When an individual thread becomes disconnected from the interwoven tapestry of community, it affects the safety and integrity of the whole. MAP works with communities to identify the individuals and elements that have become disconnected, creating mechanisms that tie these threads back into a network of community supports, bringing healing, building resilience, and strengthening the whole.

Connectedness

Innovation
Prevention
Connectedness
Restorative

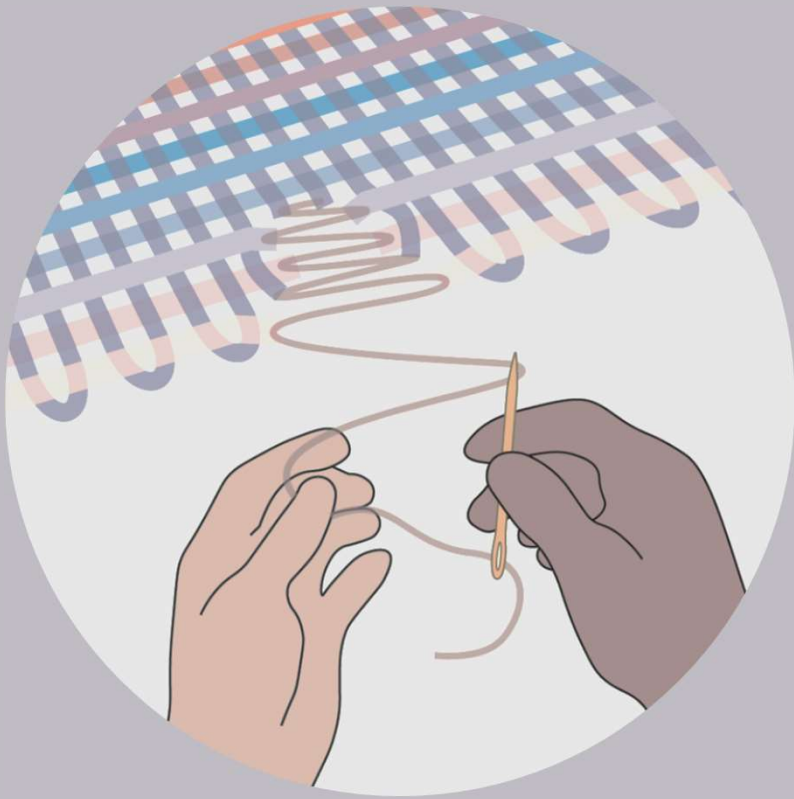

Restorative

Repairing the Tears in the Fabric of Community

Restorative Practices for Gender Based Violence

Gender-based violence rends the fabric of a community, impacting not only the immediate victim, but their families and the broader community. What survivors ask for most is an end to the violence, and a clear pathway to healing and wholeness. Mainstream systems fall short of meeting that need, and those who have caused harm remain alienated and disconnected from the people and resources that can help end patterns of violence and bring restoration. MAP works with intact elements of community, weaving harm-doers back into connection with others, facilitating a process of healing and accountability, and mending the fabric so that all can heal and thrive.

Restorative

“So I was able to pick up little tidbits as I moved along. It was a completely different view. I never had to carry the, she did this to me. I'm mad about this, I'm mad about that. We broke all that stuff down. And I no longer had to carry that anger anymore. We put it together. I was accountable for my own actions, and I moved forward with my life. I no longer had to carry that baggage. And that's because of the Circle.”

